Preface to the first edition

The important subject of the Position of Women in Vedic India captured my imagination ever since I began my Vedic studies and as soon as I got an opportunity to take up Research work, I chose this fascinating subject. This was approved by the Board of Higher Sanskrit Studies, London University, on the recommendation of the Veteran Sanskrit Scholar Dr. L. D. Barnett, Curator, Oriental Section, British Museum, under the title "The Position of Women in Vedic Age" for the M. A. Degree of the University of London and along with my promotion to the Ph. D. Degree Course in course of a year, the subject was finally selected under the heading "The Position of Women in the Vedic Ritual" for the higher degree. This was approved for the Ph. D. Degree of the London University in 1934 on the recommendation of a Board of Examiners consisting of Prof. R. L. Turner, M. A. M. C. D. Lit., Head of the Dept. of Sanskrit, London University and Director of the School of Oriental and African Studies, London ; Dr. H. N. Randle M. A. D. Phil (oxon), Librarian, India office Library, London and Mr. C. A. Rylands, M. A., Senior Lecturer in Sanskrit, London University.

In addition to the printed Vedic works that were available both in the British Museum and India Office Library, many Mss. of Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute Library, Banaras Sanskrit College, etc. were used.

My continued researches into the Position of Women in Sanskrit Literature have further confirmed my conclusions regarding the high position of Women in Ancient India. These researches have been published in seven volumes in my Series, "The Contribution of Women to Sanskrit Literature."

The present thesis is based entirely on original data collected from printed works and Mss. on various branches of Vedic Literature, viz, Saṃhitās, Brāhmaṇas, Āraṇyakas and Upaniṣads, and subsequent Literature such as the Sūtras, Epics, Purāṇas, Smṛtis, Prayogas and Paddhatis. Throughout my Thesis, I have tried to remove many misconceptions regarding the position of women during the Vedic Age, but in interpreting the texts and drawing conclusions from them, I have all along strictly adhered to the letter and spirit of the original Texts and their authoritative commentaries.

Almost the whole of this work was published in the form of articles in well-known Research Journals, such as the Indian Historical Quarterly, New Indian Antiquary, etc. during the years 1939-1941. On account of this and my other important undertakings, such as the Contributions of Muslims to Sanskrit Literature, Contributions of Bengal to Smṛti Literature, Sanskrit Dūtakavya Literature, etc., the publication of the present work in book form was not immediately undertaken. Later on, the publication of this work was held up due to the World War. II.

The Position of Women in the Vedic Ritual

CHAPTER I

THE DAUGHTER IN THE VEDIC RITUAL

The civilization of a country is best understood by a thorough study of the Position of its Women. The woman in the various phases of her life as Daughter, Wife and Mother not only protects and invigorates the man to the best of her power but safeguards his interests even at her own cost. As soon as the manfolk begins to misjudge this latter magnanimity of woman as her weakness, a nation begins to sink slowly into the depth of degradation and misery. In the long history of Indian Civilization, our society has faced innumerable odds—constant invasion from outside, intermixture of heterogenous faiths and thoughts, ruthless persecution and so on—and certainly, changes there have been many with the consequence that, social conditions changed a good deal from period to period. Even then, ancient Indian Literature exhibits a uniform spirit of reverence for womanhood and Vedic Religion does not deny any right to women, not in the least the religious. Hindu Religion upholds the Vedas as the Highest authority and the view-points of the Smṛtis and Purāṇas contradicting those of the Vedas are simply to be ignored. This just attitude of the Hindu Society has saved it at all critical times. True there have been ups and downs in the position of Hindu Women, but they have never been shorn of their inherent goodness and greatness on account of oppression or excessive depression. Along with national regeneration from period to period, the liberties and possessions of women appear to vary and that is only natural; but even then, there is the constant attitude of very deep respect for women ingrained in Indian mind which is the direct outcome of the teachings of Vedic Religion. We must analyse this thoroughly in order that we may have a thorough grasp of the Position of women in Ancient and Modern India and this we shall do in the following sections of the work.

The Daughter is affection incarnate and it is as such that Vedic Literature depicts her. She has never been denied the rights her brother enjoys. A critical analysis will reveal that in the Vedic Ritual the Daughter is just as important as the son, if not more; as a matter of fact, in many places it would appear as though in ancient India the Daughter was more covetable for the parents than the son. Certain misconceptions took the upper hand in some parts of India during Mediaeval ages owing to the then degenerate conditions; the teachings of the Veda were really ignored though apparently the commentators intended to uphold them; nation as a whole was in a tottering state and no doubt, women also had to face all sorts of ordeals. Time is now ripe when Indians should look back to their glorious Vedic Age and allow the girls to enjoy the same Vedic Rights as our Holy Scriptures declare.

The Saṃskāras must all be performed for the Daughter as well as the Son and no discrimination ought to be made between them. The pseudo-Vedic attempts of a few scholars in Mediaeval India to prove the Daughter an unwelcome member of the family must be discarded as absolutely unvedic, unholy and suicidal as the early Vedic Ritual Literature uncompromisingly compels just the reverse conclusion. In subsequent ages, women have been denied the honour of the Pūṃsavana and the privilege and dignity of the upanayana in particular. But this attitude is absolutely unvedic.

The Significance of the Vedic Rite Pūṃsavana<sup>1</sup>. The Pūṃsavana is an important Vedic rite, generally believed to be performed in order to have male children only.<sup>2</sup> But there is evidence to show that the pūṃsavana is a rite performed with the object of averting any evil to the progeny and of having either a male or a female child as desired. According to the majority of Ritual authorities<sup>3</sup> this rite is Pāraskaragrhya-sūtra, (henceforth abbreviated as PārGS.) to be performed on each occasion of the wife's pregnancy so that whenever the wife and the husband wish to have a daughter, they may use what is technically known as Ūha i.e. an alteration in the gender or other things as necessary in the sacred formulas, etc., just as they have the option to choose—if they want sons—whether they would have an heroic son or otherwise.<sup>1</sup> Both the Sīmantonnayana (the rite of parting the hair) and the Pūṃsavana are really Garbha-saṃskāras, performed for removing the sin that might bring any evil to the embryo.<sup>2</sup> The word 'Pūṃs' in the name of 'Pūṃsavana' refers to both male and female and does not at all debar the use of 'Ūha' whenever necessary.

That the first part 'Pūṃs' of the compound 'Pūṃsavana' does not stand for the male child alone is corroborated by the fact that nowhere in the Gṛhya-sūtras do the Sūtra-kāras intend to exclude daughters by the use of words in the masculine gender. The usual method is to speak about both males and females by the use of the masculine gender only; when the Sūtra-kāras have to say something particular about females, only then do they use specifically the feminine gender. Thus when Laugākṣi in the Kāṭhaka-gṛhya-sūtra says, पुत्रे जाते नाम धीयते he does not mean to say that when a daughter is born, it is to be otherwise. In commenting upon the sūtra, Ādityadarśana<sup>1</sup> expressly says that the daughter, too, should have the naming ceremony. In the Jātakarman section of the Āśvalāyana-grhya-sūtra, an aphorism<sup>2</sup> makes the provision that when a 'Kumāra' is born, the child is to be treated with water mixed with gold. In commenting upon the sūtra, Haradatta<sup>3</sup> says that herein provision is made for a 'Kumārī' as well, as the gender is not intended to be stressed, 'līngasya avivakṣitatvāt.' Similarly is to be explained जातं कुमारमभिमन्त्रयते in the Baudh GS.<sup>4</sup> It will be seen that at the end of the section on Jātakarman, Baudhāyana points out the name given to a daughter should consist of an odd number of syllables<sup>5</sup> and makes the provision of blessing the child अमुष्मै स्वस्तीति । By the use of the masculine gender in "amuṣmai," Baudhāyana certainly does not mean that "svasti," i.e., benediction should not be uttered in case of the birth of a daughter of whom he speaks in the preceding aphorism. What he really does is to revert to his general way of statement, uses the masculine gender to mean both males and females and concludes the section by prescribing the rule that the jāta-karman rites should be finished with the utterance of benediction for the child (boy or girl). The object (saṃkalpa) of the rite as stated in the Prayogas also shows that the word 'Pūṃs' is not restricted to males alone. The rite is meant for removing the sin that may bring evil to the progeny. It is, most probably, owing to this fact that MānavaGS. omits the rite altogether, as it considers the saṃskāra called Sīmantonnayana, i. e., parting of the hair, quite sufficient for averting any evil to the embryo caused by the father or mother or both. That a girl should pound a herb for use during the Pūṃsavana ceremony<sup>1</sup> also indicates that the sūtrakāras raise no objection to the birth of others of her sex, nay, more—they introduce a girl in particular, not a boy, because as shown by the analysis of the rites performed by, and for, the daughter—the daughter is for the parents the sum-total of purity, tenderness, affection, devotion and bliss.<sup>2</sup> If the meaning of the word 'Pūṃs' be limited to males only and the Pūṃsavana be a rite that must be performed, there remains no rite to be performed for the birth of a daughter. But the fact is that the birth of a daughter is most welcome. Parents perform Kāmya-śrāddhas on the second day of the moon in the hope of having a daughter.<sup>1</sup> Desirous of having a daughter, the husband touches all the fingers of the wife except the thumb during the marriage ceremony.<sup>2</sup> Longing for a daughter the bridegroom shows the bride after she has reached her new home<sup>3</sup> the Dhruva and other constellations.<sup>4</sup> The parents deem it a favour of god if they can have sons as well as daughters by their side during the performance of sacrifices.<sup>5</sup> The Rg-veda praises the father of many daughters.<sup>6</sup> The daughter claims her support from parents not for nothing, but for her devotion to them.<sup>1</sup> They care for her as much as they do for their son; or it may be said—even more, as the father is found to worship the daughter (kumārī) as an emblem of Virginity, as an emblem of Purity, of Tenderness, Devotion, and what not.<sup>2</sup> Just as the Mātṛkā-pūjā is to take place at the beginning of all Vedic rituals, the Kumārī-pūjā is recommended to be performed at the end of all; and this latter worship, the Daughter-Worship, is impossible in the absence of a daughter as she is to be bodily present. The father wraps her up with new garments, entertains her with delicious dishes and walks round her. From her first year onwards, she is worshipped as different deities; if she is one year old, as Sandhyā; if two, Sarasvatī; and so on. Thus as she grows, the parents find in her different manifestations of the Supreme Soul,—blessing them in every possible way. The daughter is indeed the embodiment of all blessings for the parents and the family. In Sanskrit literature the word Pūṃs does not exclusively mean males alone but is also found used in the sense of human beings in general. Thus, when Varāhamihira<sup>3</sup> says the earth has veins just as the bodies of 'Pums' have, the word Pums conveys necessarily the sense of human beings, as women too have veins in their bodies. Hemacandra in his Abhidhāna-cintāmaṇi<sup>1</sup> gives "martya: one who is mortal," "bhū-sprś:" one who touches (is born on) the earth," etc. as the synonyms of Pums. All these necessarily include the sense of women as well. In commenting upon a couplet quoted in the Bhāmatī which includes the word Pums in the genitive plural, Bhaṭṭa Gopīnātha in his treatise Upodghāta<sup>2</sup> says the word Pums means males as well as females. The Āśvalāyana-Śrautasūtra<sup>3</sup> too uses Pums in the same sense.

For similar examples where the gender is not intended to designate males only. cf. statements like svarga-kāmo yajeta : yaḥ svargakāmaḥ sa yajeta : one who, male or female, aspires to go to heaven, should sacrifice; see in this connection the Jaiminiya-mīmāṃsā-darśana. 6-1-7; see also Nyāya-mālā-vistara on the same 6-1-6 ff.; Karkācārya on the Kātyāyana-śrauta-sūtra, (abbreviated as KātŚS.) 1-1-7, Chowkhamba ed., 1908, p. 5; Yājñikadeva on the KātŚS., Berlin 1157, p. 8.

Thus the usual method of the Sūtra-kāras of including feminine in the masculine gender, the procedure of the rite itself, the importance of a daughter emphatically borne out by the whole range of Sanskrit literature, instances where the word Pums is found used in the sense of both males and females—all lead to the conclusion that the purpose of the Pumsavana is to avert any evil to the progeny and to have any child—male or female—as the parents desire.

that women are not entitled to be initiated for Vedic studies. Such a belief is absolutely wrong. The Gṛhya Sūtras say in connection with the initiation ceremony of the Brāhmaṇa “अष्टमवर्षे ब्राह्मणमुपनयेत्”<sup>1</sup> or “सप्तमवर्षे ब्राह्मणस्योपनयनम्”<sup>2</sup> or “गर्भाष्टमे ब्राह्मणमुपनयेत्”<sup>3</sup> or exactly similar things<sup>4</sup> meaning that the Brāhmaṇa should be initiated in the 7th or 8th year after he was conceived or born; they make similar rules for the Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas too—only extending the age-limit for them. Here by Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya and Vaiśya the Sūtra-kāras mean that both the boy and the girl of these castes are to be initiated. As in the case of स्वर्गकामः<sup>5</sup> in “स्वर्गकामो यजेत”, here also the gender is not intended to designate the Masculine alone. By a rule like this “ब्राह्मणो न हन्तव्यः i.e. the Brāhmaṇa should not be murdered” it is meant that the ब्राह्मणी also should not be murdered. Similarly by saying “मरणधर्मी मानवः or man is mortal”, we mean that the woman is also mortal.

Hārīta<sup>1</sup> says women are of two types : those who speak about Brahman and those who soon become wives (i.e. those who do not grow old in their parents' house). Of them, the first type has (the right to) initiation, establishment of fire, Vedic studies, and observance of begging alms in their own houses; the second is initiated and (soon after) married. Yama<sup>2</sup> as quoted in the Kūrmapurāṇa, says that in ancient times the tying of the girdle is prescribed for girls; so also the teaching of the Vedas, and the utterance of the Sāvitrī. Nobody except her father, uncle or brother should teach her. The vow of begging alms is prescribed for her within (the limit of) her house. She should dispense with the deer skin, the bark and the wearing of matted locks. Here Yama seems to refer to the existence of the custom not only in ancient times, but also in his own days, the construction being पुराकल्पे (यथैष्यते) तथा (अधुनाऽपि) इष्यते. The word तथा is significantly put by Yama by way of a comparison between the old time and his own time. So he makes the rule for his own time that nobody other than the girl's father, uncle or brother should teach her, she should beg in her house only (and not elsewhere) and she should not wear deer-skin, bark and matted locks. If Yama had intended to say that, unlike in ancient times in his own time the girl should not be initiated, he would have surely said something like this:—पुरा-कल्पे कुमारीणां मोक्षो-बन्धमिष्यते । इह कल्पे तासामेवं न कुर्यान्मतिमान् क्वचित् ॥ As he continues with a series of verbs, all in the present tense—one in Lat and two in Lin, it is only reasonable to think that he prescribes the rules for his own days as was the case in ancient times too.

Without being initiated ceremonially, nobody is entitled to utter holy mantras. But the woman is found to utter sacred formulas in various sacrifices, gr̥hya as well as śrauta. In the Sākamedha, the third four-monthly sacrifice, the girl uses the Tryambaka Mantra.<sup>1</sup> Mahīdhara<sup>2</sup> in his commentary Veda-dīpa says the unmarried girls of the sacrificer should walk round the fire three times along with the other males, the sons of the sacrificer and others while uttering the Tryambaka Mantra for Tryambaka's blessing. According to the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> the priests and the sacrificer go round the altar thrice from right to left—smiting the left thigh; but the maidens go from left to right—smiting the right thigh. While doing so, the maidens utter the formula: "We worship Tryambaka, the fragrant bestower of husbands. Even as a gourd is severed from its stem, so may I be severed from this world, not from thence.”<sup>1</sup> Kātyāyana<sup>2</sup> says “कुमार्यश्चोत्तरेण उभयत्र पतिकामा भगकामा वा : the unmarried girls (of the sacrificer) too (should go round the fire), the latter<sup>3</sup> while uttering part of the mantra, in both the directions ( पितृवद्देववच्च परिक्रमणे : in going round both in the direction of the manes i. e. the left, and in the direction of the gods, i. e., the right) either with the object of having husbands or fortune.” Yājñikadeva<sup>4</sup> in the Paddhati says, “वचनात् कुमार्या अपि मन्त्रपाठ : i. e. the maiden too is to utter the sacred formula as it is so prescribed.” Satyāṣāḍha<sup>5</sup> also says that if the daughter of the sacrificer longs for marriage, she should take the reverse course (to the one taken by the males) along with the utterance of the Tryambaka formula.<sup>6</sup>

In the Varuṇa-praghāṣas, the second four-monthly sacrifice, after Haviṣ is placed on the north and south altars, the Pratiprasthātṛ—while leading the wife to the fire for the Karambha-pātra oblation—asks her if she has any lover or lovers. After her declaration<sup>7</sup> she utters the for-

In the agniṣṭoma too, the wife, entering by the south door, anoints the axles of the Soma-cart with the remnant of the clarified butter left after the Sāvitrī-homa along with the utterance of the formula, “देव भृतौ etc.”<sup>5</sup>

There are several such instances where the wife or wives use sacred formulas. The Purāṇas and the Smṛtis as well furnish examples as to the right of women to utter the holy mantras. The Skanda-purāṇa<sup>6</sup> says that the wife should sacrifice with the sacred formulas in the rituals in accordance with the regulations; so, in the funeral rite too, she, according to the sacred law, is entitled to utter the sacred mantras.

The Kālādarśa, as quoted in the Śrāddha-mayūkha<sup>1</sup> of Nilakaṇṭha Mīmāṃsaka Bhaṭṭa, quotes the following lines from the same source to show that women are not entitled to utter the sacred formulas in the funeral and śrāddha rites: सर्वाभावे स्त्रियः कुर्युः स्वभर्तृणाममन्त्रकम् : in the absence of all others, the स्त्रियः i.e. the women should offer to the bhartṛs i.e. the maintainers without mantras.” Unfortunately we cannot trace the line in the Calcutta edition of the Skandapurāṇa. The line, however, occurs in the Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa.<sup>2</sup> We read herein like this :—a सर्वाभावे स्त्रियः कुर्युः स्वभर्तृणाममन्त्रकम् । b तदभावे च नृपतिः कारयेत् स्वकुटुम्बिनाम् ॥ c तज्जातीयैर्नरैः सम्यग् दाहाद्याः सकलाः क्रियाः । and preceding these lines are—i पातृ-त्रये प्रंत-पातृं अर्घञ्चैव प्रसेचयेत् । ये समाना इति जपन् पूर्ववच्छेषमाचरेत् ॥ j स्त्रीणामप्येवमेवेतदेकोद्दिष्टमुदाहृतम् । मृताहनि यथान्यायं नृणां यद्वदिहोदितम् ॥ But Raghunandana<sup>3</sup> takes the stanzas in the following order; a. b. i. j. to run concurrently and argues that “apy evam” in j. means “amantrakam” as in a. and so “स्त्रीणां मन्त्रनिषेधोऽपि तत्सम्प्रदानकश्चाद् एवावगम्यते: the prohibition (of the use) of mantra applies to those cases only where the women offer the Śrāddha”. We cannot find out in any of the printed editions or manuscripts available in the India Office Library the order followed by Raghunandana. Moreover, the word “स्त्रियः” in a above does not mean "Wife", but any and every woman maintained by the deceased. In the Śrāddha-viveka, after enumerating the long list of those who are entitled to perform the Śrāddhas, the author says "तदभावे यथाकथञ्चित् परिगृहीताः स्त्रियः—these failing, any and every woman taken hold of by any means would do." These are the women meant in line a above and not the wife. The claim of the wife (Patnī) to perform the funeral and Śrāddha for her husband follows immediately after the son, i.e. the son failing, the wife is to do so. Saṅkha, Kātyāyana, Śrāddha-viveka, Śrāddha-mayūkha, Śrāddha-kriyā-kaumudī and all other authorities are unanimous on the point. So by "स्त्रियः" in "सर्वाभावे स्त्रियः कुर्युः", the wife can by no means be meant. The words "apy evam" in line j in the order we find mean that the mantras "ये समानाः", etc. are to be uttered and that the rites following should be the same as mentioned before. The Kalpa-taru says that "स्त्रीणामप्येवम्" etc. means: "यादृशेन सम्बन्धेन पितृव्यत्वादिना पुरुषाणामेकादशाहादि श्राद्धं, तादृशेन च सम्बन्धेन स्त्रीणामेतत् कर्तव्यमिति". Here it is evident that the women also utter the mantra in the Śrāddha. After having said that the Ekoddiṣṭa and Sapiṇḍikaraṇa should be offered with mantras, Yājñavalkya<sup>1</sup> says "This Sapiṇḍikaraṇa as well as Ekoddiṣṭa should be offered to the woman also". Yājñavalkya has suggested no distinction whatsoever. The Chandoga-pariśiṣṭa<sup>2</sup> also says that the Sapiṇḍikaraṇa of the mother is said to be observed with the grandmother (on the father's side) in accordance with the rites as mentioned. Here also no distinction whatsoever is suggested. The Śrāddha-kriyā-kaumudī<sup>1</sup> also comments on the couplet स्त्रीणाममन्त्रकं श्राद्धमिति वचनात् स्त्रीणां सकल-श्राद्ध एव सकल-मन्त्रपाठो नास्तीति वदन्ति । तन्मन्दं वचनस्यामूलत्वात् सकलसंग्रहेष्वदृष्टत्वात् । etc. Here he thinks the couplet "Strīṇāṃ amantrakam" śrāddham," etc. is baseless (an interpolation) as it is not found' in all the Saṃgrahas and the view that the woman is not entitled to perform the Śrāddha with mantras is not tenable. The Brahma-purāṇa<sup>2</sup> also says distinctly that women should offer the Śrāddha with mantras. Śaṅkha<sup>3</sup> says that the daughter too after her saṃskāra should, like the boy, observe the Aśauca, perform the funeral rite, offer Piṇḍas and celebrate the Ekoddiṣṭa for her father. Here too no distinction has been suggested and accordingly the mantras are to be uttered by the daughter too. The reason why the "स्त्रियः" in line a above who are really "यथाकथञ्चित् परिगृहीताः स्त्रियः" in the language of the Śrāddha-viveka-kāra should not utter the mantras is, therefore, not that the woman, because of her sex, is not entitled to utter the mantra in the Śrādd-ha, but because these women somehow picked out in the absence of all others need not utter the mantras. Such women will perform the Śrāddha somehow, and nobody would like them to perform the Śrāddhas in all the details. If the mantras are cut out, the oblations are also necessarily cut out and the ceremonies too become reduced by almost two-thirds. This is the reason why the यथाकथञ्चित् परिगृहीताः स्त्रियः should not utter the mantras.

The Nṛsiṃha-tāpanīya Upaniṣad says सावित्रीं प्रणवं यजुः क्षीशूद्वयोर्नेच्छन्ति : (some) do not recommend (the utterance of) the Sāvitrī, Praṇava and Yajuṣ for the woman and the śūdra.”<sup>1</sup> Baudhāyana<sup>2</sup> says, “अमन्त्रा हि स्त्रियो मताः—some say, women are not entitled to utter the mantra.” The words “नेच्छन्ति” and “मताः” in the above texts show that the authorities themselves do not think that women are not entitled to utter the mantras though there are a few schools who think otherwise. Moreover, the authority of the Smṛti cannot be reckoned as valid against that of the Śruti. Thus, Vedavyāsa<sup>3</sup> says that where Śruti, Smṛti and Purāṇa differ (in opinion), the Śruti should be considered as the authority; of the (latter two) Smṛti precedes (over the Purāṇa). So, the schools whom Baudhāyana mentions need not be taken into serious consideration. The opinion of the school quoted by the Nṛsiṃha-tāpanīya Upaniṣad is to be ignored not only because the Upaniṣad itself considers it ignorable, but also because the opinion of the majority should prevail when the authorities differ among themselves. Our copious Śruti evidence shows that the opinion of the opponent school cannot prevail.

In the Piṇḍa-pitṛ-yajña<sup>1</sup> and other Śrāddhas<sup>2</sup> the middle cake<sup>3</sup> given to the manes is to be eaten by the wife (Patnī). The husband gives her the cake saying that she should eat it as it represents the juice of the annual herbs growing in waters; as a result she should become pregnant with a human embryo. The wife too<sup>4</sup> eats the cake with the prescribed mantra. If the house-holder has many wives, he divides the cake amongst them all and all of them should eat their respective portions along with the utterance of the above sacred formula. The author of the Vaijayantī as mentioned in the Saṃskāra-ratna-mālā<sup>5</sup> says this eating of the cake is not optional but obligatory whenever the Śrāddha is celebrated. According to him, therefore, the utterance of this mantra is not an occasional but a regular right of the wife: if the eating of the cake is a regular (nitya) right, the utterance of the mantra must also be her regular right during the observance of all the Śrāddhas. It does not seem, however, that the eating of the middle cake or both the cakes is compulsory. The Śrāddha-mayūkha<sup>1</sup> says it is only optional and not obligatory. Manu uses the word "Sutārthinī: desirous of a son" while prescribing the eating of the cake by the wife. Devaṇṇa-bhaṭṭa in the Śrāddha-kāṇḍa<sup>2</sup> says if she is desirous of a son or a daughter, the wife should eat the cake. Yama also says the wife desirous of an issue should do so. The Vāyu-purāṇa puts the word "Prajārthinī: longing for a son or a daughter" as an adjective to the wife and mentions the sacred formula "आधत्त पितरो गर्भम्" which, it assures, is सन्तानवर्धनः (capable of) increasing (the number of) sons or daughters." Anyhow, the fact remains that whenever the wife eats the middle cake she as a rule utters the mantra. It is her right and no authority has ever intended to deprive her of this.

Āśvalāyana<sup>3</sup> says in his Gṛhyasūtra that from the time of marriage onwards the house-holder himself, the wife, the son, the unmarried girl, or a disciple, should offer regular oblations to the Gṛhya fire. GārgyaNārāyaṇa<sup>4</sup> and Hara-datta<sup>5</sup> also cite the opinion of some schools according to whom the wife and the unmarried daughter are entitled to offer the oblation without any reservation. Khādira<sup>1</sup> says, "Some say the wife should sacrifice; the wife is the house and the fire belongs to the house." Gobhila<sup>2</sup> also says the wife should verily offer the morning and evening oblation to the domestic fire for the same reason. According to the Prayogaratna<sup>3</sup> too, the wife, the unmarried daughter, the son, or the disciple, should offer the sacrifice in accordance with the above-mentioned order. The Smṛty-artha-sāra<sup>4</sup> also holds that the sacrifice offered by the wife, the daughter, etc. is to be considered just the same as offered by the sacrificer though the wife and the daughter should offer without the besprinkling (पर्युक्षण). So the wife and the unmarried daughter are entitled to offer the oblation along with the utterance of the mantras unquestionably, together with the Om at the beginning and end of each mantra.<sup>5</sup> The connection between the domestic fire and the wife is so close that the fasting in case of its extinction devolves on the wife.<sup>6</sup>

Tarkālaṅkāra in his commentary on Gobhila,<sup>1</sup> however, thinks that the wife should be given, on this account, so much education as would suffice for this, because "without studies she cannot sacrifice, nor does the Sūtra say that she should offer silently." Anyway, this much confession is sufficient to show that the wife is entitled to the Initiation ceremony so that she may be entitled to read at all, not to speak of uttering the Vedic mantras.

Pāraskara<sup>2</sup> says that the wife should, if she is desirous of conception, offer the first oblation in the evening as well as in the morning along with the utterance of the prescribed mantra wherein she should utter the "Svāhā" again.<sup>3</sup> All the commentators, Karka,<sup>4</sup> Jayarāma, Harihara, Gadādhara and Viśvanātha agree that the wife should worship the fire with the first oblation in the morning as well as in the evening with the above mantra. The mantra

Āśvalāyana<sup>1</sup> in connection with his section on Nāmakaraṇa says: 1. नाम च अस्मै दद्युः । 2. घोषवदाद्यन्तरन्तस्थमधिनिग्रानान्तं द्वयक्षरम् । 3. चतुरक्षरं वा । 4. द्वयक्षरं प्रतिष्ठा-कामश्चतुरक्षरं ब्रह्म-वर्चस-कामः । 5. युग्मानि त्वेव पुंसाम् । 6. अयुग्मानि स्त्रीणाम् । 7. अभिवादनीयश्च समीक्षेत तन्मातापितरौ विद्येतामा उपनयनात् । In the commentary upon the Sūtra marked 5 by us, Haradatta says that because of the mention of "Tu" and "Eva" in the Sūtra all that is said in the above Sūtras (2-4) is not sufficient; and it is prescribed here that the names for males should consist of even syllables. The names of females should consist of an odd number of syllables. Āśvalāyana thus finishes what he has to say about the सांव्यवहारिक नाम and proceeds, without making any more distinction, to say about the abhivādāniya name of the child (male or female)<sup>2</sup>—" (He) should find out a name to be used (by the child) at the time when the child bows down to her<sup>3</sup> (during the upanayana); the parents should keep the Sāṅkhāyana and Kauṣītaki (1.24) also mention this secret name, an earlier reference to which is found in the Bṛh. Up.(vi.4.26)—with ceremonial details. The consensus of opinion is that this secret name must be given. This name reserved for use during the initiation ceremony for the girl has no meaning if the girl is not allowed to bow down to the Guru at the proper time.<sup>4</sup> sacrificial cord (over the left shoulder), he should murmur the verse "Soma gave her to the Gandharva, etc." Prāvṛtā here means evidently प्र प्रक्षेण आवृता वेषपरिहिता यज्ञोपवीतिनो यज्ञोपवीतविशिष्टा i.e. she who has worn the dress properly and the sacred thread. In the Adhikāra Sūtra, Gobhila himself as well as Kātyāyana<sup>1</sup> say that one must always wear the sacred thread. So the repetition of yajñopavīta here means that for ceremonial purpose the bride should change her former yajñopavīta and wear a new one.

Candrakānta Tarkālāṅkāra, however, thinks otherwise. He gives us two alternative explanations.<sup>2</sup> Firstly, he says the word yajñopavītinīm in the passage means यज्ञोपवीतिनोमिव यज्ञोपवीतकृतोत्तरीयम् The bride is prāvṛtā kṛtottariyā. How is she Prāvṛtā? : like a yajñopavītinī, like one who has worn the upper garment in the form of a sacred thread." Secondly, "Prāvṛtām" means प्रक्षेणाच्छादिता स्मृत्युक्तीत्या परिहिताधरीयवसनाम् and "yajñopavītinīm" means यज्ञोपवीतत्वात् परिहितोत्तरवसनाम् i.e. the bride who has worn her lower garments in the manner prescribed in the Smṛti and worn her upper garments in the fashion of a yajñopavīta. The learned commentator also says the word yajñopavīta may be used in the sense of the uttarīya for showing which way the uttarīya is to be worn. These explanations are not tenable.

2. For the Text, see GobhGS. Bib. Ind., p. 308.

Tarkālaṅkāra quotes the Smṛti to show how the bride should be properly dressed: "She should not show the navel, the virtuous wife should wear the clothes down to the heels and should not keep the breasts uncovered." According to his second explanation "Prāvṛta" means "she who has worn the lower garment" and "Yajñopavītīnī" means "she who has worn the upper garment in the form of a sacred thread." The explanation that he gives does not follow the direction he mentions. If "Prāvṛtā" does not mean "One wearing both upper and lower garments" but "One wearing the lower garment" only, the breasts remain uncovered. The uttarīyavasana used in the form of a sacred thread cannot cover her breasts.<sup>1</sup> The commentator in commenting upon Gobh. 1.1.2. says on p. 17 "तदिदं यज्ञ-सूत्र-द्वयमुत्तरोयश्च खल्विह कर्म-माल-शेषतया विधित्सितं विन्यासविशेषस्तु उत्तरोयस्येव यज्ञसूत्रस्यापि तत्र तत्र तत्तद्वाक्यादवगन्तव्यः । This pair of sacred threads and the upper garment are here mentioned as a rule as requisite for every ritual; but the particular manner of wearing it—as of the upper garment, so of the sacred thread—is to be known from those particular passages in those particular places". For this reason the word yajñopavīta cannot be used in the sense of the uttarīya. It is declared in the Smṛti:—<sup>2</sup> यज्ञोपवीते द्वे धार्ये

1. For the right manner of wearing the yajñopavīta, see Karma-pradīpa, ch. I, verse 2 : त्रिवृद्ध्वं-वृत्रं कार्यं तन्तुद्वयमधोवृतम् । त्रिवृत्तद्यौपवीतं स्वात्तल्लैको अग्निरिच्छते ॥ GobhGS, p. 64, l. 12f. 2. KarmaKP. Bombay, 1921 f. 51 ; cf. Smṛtyarthasāra, p. 5. 1. 10; GobhGS. p. 65.

श्रोत-स्मार्तेषु कर्मसु । तृतीयञ्चोत्तरोयार्थं वस्त्रालामे तदिष्यते ॥ “Two sacred threads are to be worn in the Śrauta and Smārta sacrifices; a third one also should be worn for an upper garment: this is prescribed if a cloth is not available.” Here it is said that a third sacred thread is to be used if an uttarīya is not available. If the uttarīya is not wanting, the third thread is not to be used. Here the word yajñopavīta is not certainly used in the sense of uttarīya, but it is said that yajñopavīta is to be substituted for the uttarīya. A substitute for a thing can never be the thing itself. Nor is it reasonable to think that because two different things are worn in the same manner, Gobhila has used one word for the other. Why should he? The uttarīya is as well-known as the yajñopavīta. What reason is there that the word uttarīya would be dropped at will and the word “yajñopavīta” be substituted for it? The learned commentator quotes in p. 65 the Nigama-pariśiṣṭa “वाससा यज्ञोपवीतानि कुरुते, तदभावे त्रिवृता सुवेण”<sup>1</sup> in which, he thinks, the word “yajñopavīta” means an upper garment (uttarīya). To follow the commentator, the sacrificer is to wear three upper garments which is nowhere prescribed in the Ritual literature. Again, three uttarīyas to be made of a cloth is an anomaly, for, in order to wear it properly, one is to wear the cloth wound round nine times on one’s shoulder sideways. Two, and sometimes three of these, are to be worn. Nobody wants the sacrificer to carry a heap of clothes round about him. The real meaning of the passage is what is expressed in the couplet above. The cloth, not a sacred thread but an accompaniment of the two threads normally used, is considered as making the number of threads three. We come across a similar use in the following passage: ‘Yajamānapaṇcamā ṛtvija iḍām bhakṣayanti:’<sup>1</sup> the priests with yajamāna as the fifth drink the iḍā.’ Here, too, similarly, the ‘Upavīta’, means two sacred threads with the garment as the third, i.e. the “Upavītāni” three in number together with the garment which is not an ‘upavīta’ as in the above case the yajamāna is not a priest. So it is here by no means said, as our commentator thinks, that the ‘yajñopavīta’ is ‘uttariya.’

In a sacrifice to be performed even by the widow, she should wear the sacred cord on the right or left shoulder as prescribed<sup>2</sup> and should herself offer the annual or other śrāddhas to her husband, father-in-law, etc.<sup>3</sup> When she performs an ekoddiṣṭa śrāddha for a son, daughter, etc. she should herself do all the initial ceremonial necessities up to the initial resolution (Samkalpa) and may then give permission to a priest to perform the śrāddha on her behalf.<sup>4</sup>

In course of the ceremony she wears the sacred cord on the right or left shoulder accordingly as the priest does.<sup>1</sup> This is the case when she gives a priest permission to perform the rite for her; no wonder she will do the same in course of performing the rite herself. If she is not entitled to be initiated for the vedic studies and wear the sacred cord, she cannot wear the sacred thread during the sacrifice. In the section on Adhikāra-sūtra prescribing general rules (to be observed in all the rites), Gobhila<sup>2</sup> says that the ceremony should be performed by one wearing the sacrificial thread on one's left shoulder (as a rule) and having sipped water. In other places we have shown that the woman is entitled to perform the sacrifices. Without following the general rule, how can she perform the sacrifice properly? Even in modern usage there is some relic of the woman's wearing the sacred thread. Now-a-days the bride is made to wear during the marriage the sacred thread of the bridegroom. This is a rite observed by women.<sup>3</sup> Women, owing to their conservative nature,<sup>4</sup> always stick to things of time immemorial. Āpastamba and others pay their due respect to these Stry-ācāras when they recommend them to be observed as their prescribed rules.<sup>5</sup> So it is certain that by “Yajñopavītinī” Gobhila means a bride who has worn the sacrificial thread and not one who has worn the upper garment in the form of a “Yajñopavīta”. Gobhila here means that the bride should be properly dressed with the lower garment (adhariya) as well as upper (uttariya), and should wear a pair of new sacred threads; then the husband should lead her, hand in hand, to the marriage alter, while uttering the sacred formula “Soma gave to Gandharva,” etc. Though in the section on general rules (Adhikārasūtras) it has been prescribed that the sacred thread should be always worn while sacrificing,<sup>1</sup> the repetition of “Yajñopavīta” would here mean that a pair of new sacred threads are to be worn during the marriage ceremony.

Kātyāyana says in the Karma-pradīpa<sup>2</sup> that in accordance with the seniority in caste and age, the honest wives should separately stir the fire. In stirring the fire the husband should not appoint a śūdrā, an uncontrollable or a vicious wife.<sup>3</sup> The strongest of them who is the best of them as are required by custom should be learnt from women; cf. ĀpDS. 11, 6, 15, 9; 11, 11, 29, 11-12: ĀśvGS. 1, 14, 8: etc.

it were and certainly, the best of all those initiated (i.e. the most learned)<sup>1</sup> should stir the fire last of all with all her heart's content. This shows that Initiation for studies was a condition, not only necessary, but essential, for having preferential treatment in the religious, and consequently, in household affairs too.

In the Rāmāyaṇa,<sup>2</sup> queen Kauśalyā and in the Mahābhārata,<sup>3</sup> Sāvitrī and Ambā offer oblations along with sacred formulas.

In his section "Strī-saṃskāras" in the Madana-pārijāta,<sup>4</sup> Madana Pāla quotes Kātyāyana<sup>5</sup> to show that if any purificatory rite (saṃskāra) before the initiation ceremony is left unobserved, it should be performed with the offering of oblations. If the time for initiation expires, according to Madana, sacrifices for recovering the rights forfeited (Vrātya-stomas) and other expiations are to be observed. As Madana deals with these things in his section on Strī-saṃskāra, it is clear that women are entitled to be initiated.

The brilliant record of their Vedic education also shows that women are entitled to be initiated for Vedic studies. The Ṛg-veda furnishes us with a long list of seers composing or discoursing on sacred texts (Brahmavādinīs). Accord-

Vācaknavī is venerated as the champion of all the learned Brāhmaṇas present in the court of Janaka to ask Yājñavalkya, the most learned sage of his age, a series of questions in order to ascertain if they should debate with Yājñavalkya or not.<sup>1</sup> This time she asks him two questions which he manages to answer. On a subsequent occasion<sup>2</sup> she takes up the question of the old water cosmology. Yājñavalkya is, however, compelled to dissuade her from asking any further question. Umā Haimavatī tells Agni and Vāyu of the one Supreme Soul.<sup>3</sup> The A V. in extolling the Brahmacharya says that by Vedic studentship a girl wins a young husband.<sup>4</sup> The Vedic literature contains a long list of the names of female teachers of Philosophy and the Śāṅkhāyana<sup>5</sup> and Āśvalāyana<sup>6</sup> gṛhya-sūtras mention the names of Gārgī Vācaknavī, Vāḍavā Prāthitheyī and Sulabhā Maitreyī in the list of Ṛṣis. The Aitareya<sup>7</sup> and Kauṣītaki<sup>8</sup> Brāhmaṇas quote the authoritative opinion of a “Kumārī Gandharva-grhītā: maiden seized by a Gandharva” that the Agnihotra Ritual which was once performed on both days is now performed on alternate days only. Patañjala Kāpya's wife<sup>9</sup> and daughter<sup>10</sup> were also Gandharva-grhītās. Students from all over the country visited them for knowledge. Kāpya himself learnt many things from his wife. The extensive use of matrony-mics also may partly be due to the wide reputation of the learning of the mothers, some of whom were most probably teachers. Kātyāyana recognises the established position and honour of women teachers in his Sūtras (Vā. 2477) "Acār-yād aṇatvam ca" and (Vā. 125) "Mātulopādhyāyayor ānug-vā."<sup>1</sup> Because of the honour shown to the learned women, the parents perform some special ceremony for having a learned daughter.<sup>2</sup> They boil rice mixed with sesamum, eat it with butter and make themselves worthy of giving birth to a learned daughter. Ātreya goes from North India to the South to learn the Vedānta from Agastya and others.<sup>3</sup> Ubhayabhārati<sup>4</sup> mediates in the controversy between her husband Maṇḍana Miśra and Śaṅkarācārya who represent the Vedic learning in their age.<sup>5</sup> Even in the RV., women are found exhorted for addressing popular assemblies (vidathas)<sup>6</sup> and certainly some of them were good orators.

In the Vedic ritual women have a recognised position for their songs and aptitude in music. Most probably these were parts of their Sāma-vedic learning. The RV bears testimony to women's songs on ceremonial occasions.<sup>1</sup> Women are more willing to have singers rather than Brahma-vādins. Women love men who can sing.<sup>2</sup> In the Ma āvrata, wives sing and play various sorts of instruments.<sup>3</sup> The Satyāśāḍha-śrauta-sūtra<sup>4</sup> mentions in this connection the name of the following instruments, viz., Apaghāṭalikā, Tālukavīṇā, Kāṇḍavīṇā, Pichorā, and Alāvu-kapīśiṣṇa; the Sāṅkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra,<sup>5</sup> Ghatakarkarī, Avaghāṭarikā. Kāṇḍavīṇā, Pichorā, etc; the Lāṭyāyana-śrauta-sūtra<sup>6</sup> also gives a similar list. The Aitareya-Āraṇyaka<sup>7</sup> simply refers to the fact, but does not give any detail. According to Lāṭyāyana, the wives should sit to the west of the Udgātṛ and each wife should alternately play lutes.<sup>8</sup> They must not play one particular instrument called Ghāṭarī slowly.<sup>9</sup> As every part of the ritual must be perfectly performed, it may be fairly assumed that the wives were expected to be expert musicians and singers. The aptitude of women in dancing is also exhibited in the RV.<sup>10</sup>

the bride is anointed with hands smeared with ghee for making her dear to her husband, brother-in-law etc. and then she plays the various instruments and drums which have been consecrated beforehand for the purpose; she prays to the Dundubhi and Gomukha for excellent children and particularly for charming daughters who, growing up under the same roof and friendly with Indrāṇī, would play together, and also to Prajāpati for children and welfare.

The references to Viśpalā's being provided with a leg of iron in Khela's battle would show that women were trained in the Military art as well.<sup>1</sup> Being chased by Mudgalānī her husband's enemy took to heels.<sup>2</sup> There were many fighting women in the non-Aryan fold as well.<sup>3</sup>

No better honour could be shown to the learning of women than by depicting the deity of learning as a goddess. Vāc and Sarasvatī represent the highest recognition and respect the Hindu sages could ever show to women.

From our above arguments the conclusion follows that the girl is entitled to have the Upanayana, wear the sacrificial thread and utter the mantras together with the praṇava.

in any case, precede in her claim over her brother. The Śrāddha-mayūkha thinks as the wife precedes the daughter in her claim over the property, the former should precede in the śrāddhas too.<sup>1</sup> Govindānanda, author of the Śrāddha-kriyā-kaumudī also holds the same view.<sup>2</sup> He also thinks that the unmarried daughter will have the right to perform the śrāddha in precedence over the married one as the Gotra of the latter has been changed.<sup>3</sup> If the daughter is rendered a Putrikā, she precedes over her mother in her claim.<sup>4</sup> Śūlapāṇi,<sup>5</sup> however, thinks that in case of absence of the 13 kinds of son, the son of the Putrikā will be the proper person. As the Putrikā is really a substitute for the son, most probably Śūlapāṇi means if the Putrikā is dead, her son should observe the rites.

Govindānanda<sup>6</sup> specifically says that the daughter will have the right and not her father, to perform the funeral and śrāddha rites for her mother provided she is brotherless.

Just like the son, the daughter also is not entitled to be married within one year of her father or mother's death, as the Vṛddhiśrāddha cannot be performed for her.<sup>7</sup>

By Pūrvakriyā, he means all the rites beginning from the cremation down to the end of the Aśauca, तत्र दाहमारम्भाद्यौचास्तदिनपर्यन्ता क्रिया पूवा । In case she is cremated, the water-libations must be offered. For the offering of water-libation and the Aśauca, see also Vasiṣṭha, IV, 9-10; Vasiṣṭha cites the opinion of some who think the child should be cremated after the appearing of the teeth. Cf. before marriage, it continues for three days.<sup>1</sup> For the death of a married daughter, the parents need not observe any impurity. But if she dies in their house, they observe Aśauca for three nights.<sup>2</sup>

As the Vedic Authority is to supersede the Authority of the Smṛti, the daughter has the right to marry in her adult age at her discretion the person whom she loves most. Adult marriage seems to have been the rule even down to the Sūtra period. Against Prof. JOLLY,<sup>3</sup> Dr. Bhandarkar<sup>4</sup> maintains that the passages in question, viz., GobhGS., III, 46, HirG5., 1, 12, 2 and Gr̥hyāsamgraha II, 17, do not go in support of the marriage of a "Nagnikā". The Jaim GS.<sup>5</sup> expressly says the bride should be "Anagnikā: not one who has not menstruated, i.e., she should have puberty". The Vār GS.<sup>6</sup> says, the bride should be not only anagnikā, but "Aspr̥ṣṭamaithunā: having no sexual experience"; the latter adjective signifies that the girl is married at an age when she is able to have had previous sexual experience. Bloomfield also accepts the reading anagnikā in ZDMG<sup>7</sup>. Paṇḍit Satyavrata Sāmaśramin accepts in his edition of the Gr̥hyāsamgraha the reading "Anagnikā."<sup>8</sup> Mahāmahopādhyāya C. Tarkālaṅkāra in 1908 quotes the verse Gr̥hyāsamgraha

The two verses RV. X. 85, 40.41—AV. XIV. 2, 3.4 are found in various Gṛhya-sūtra.<sup>9</sup> Here it is said that Soma, Gandharva and Agni are the three previous husbands of the women and her human husband is the fourth one. Gobhilaputra says in his Gṛhyā-saṃgraha<sup>3</sup> that along with the indications of youth Soma begins to enjoy the woman, Gandharva with the development of breasts, and Agni after puberty. Now, if the human husband is to marry after Agni has enjoyed her as his wife, Agni being the third husband, he is to marry her after her puberty.

The Vrata of the fourth night<sup>4</sup> is to be celebrated for solemnizing the marriage itself as without it the wife cannot be one with her husband in Piṇḍa, Gotra and Sūtaka.<sup>1</sup> This vrata sanctifies the female body for all purposes and makes the wife same flesh and blood, heart and soul with her husband.<sup>2</sup> If the husband and the wife observe penance for one year, they are sometimes given the assurance of having a Ṛṣi son;<sup>3</sup> if they cannot restrain themselves, they may have sexual enjoyment after 5, 3, or 1 month or even after 12, or 6, or 3 days, or 1 day at least. As the authorities prescribe that they may enjoy sexually even after a day, the girl must be physically fit for such enjoyment. So in the Sūtra period the girl cannot be married before puberty. With the lowering of the age-limit in later times which came down and down so much that even conception-marriage became a matter of great religious concern, the law-givers stick to the principle of the solemnization of the marriage by means of this vrata, but they speak no more of the vrata to take place within one year or after a few days, the reasons for which are obvious. Even those early law-givers who, unlike Manu, Parāśara and Nārada, think that widows should not be re-married even when they suffer from five forms of distress, admit that an akṣatayoni (having no experience of sexual intercourse) widow should, however, be re-married. While there was no scope in olden times for any such distinction, the later device was made as a concession to popular feelings, specially because Law-givers as well as their followers were still immensely guided by the influence of the Sūtrakāras.

Again, the marriage ritual in the Gṛhya-sūtras has no place in it for the girl's father after the Kanyādāna rite. The subsequent rite is entirely an affair of the husband and wife. The mutual promises and assurances of love protection and obedience<sup>1</sup> presuppose a much greater, capacity in both than can be attributed to them even in their adolescent period. The proper performance of the ritual requires that the wife must understand the mantras she utters;<sup>2</sup> this also presupposes a reasonably advanced age. The Mantra-Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> expressly says the girl should be given in marriage only when she longs for a husband.

The Kāma-sūtra and Epics also uphold the discretionary power of the maiden in choosing her husband. The former<sup>4</sup> expressly says that the Gandharva, i.e., the Love-form of marriage is the best of all the eight; and it mentions various ways by which the maiden should capture the heart of her lover and the lover that of his lady-love. The Svayamvara<sup>1</sup> form of marriage of the Epics is well-known. Manu<sup>2</sup> also recognises the Gandharva marriage, the voluntary union of a maiden and her lover, as dharmya, sanctioned by Religion. He also recognises the discretionary power of the bride when he says that the consent of the maiden would be necessary<sup>3</sup> if she were to be given in marriage to the younger brother of the person who had paid the nuptial fee. The Vedic Saṃhitās, too, show that there was no parental control in this respect, though the parents helped the girl to the best of their power in finding out her husband.<sup>4</sup> Here the maiden is found anxious to leave her father's gotra and family for ever and be permanent in her husband's family. If successful in love-matters, the younger sister marries before her elder sister even; if unsuccessful, daughters grow old in the parental abode.<sup>5</sup> In order that the maiden may get the husband she wants to have, the AV. gives a series of love-charms which pass under the name of Strī-kṛtya hymns.<sup>6</sup> Rival lovers and lady-loves perform malicious rites to win the hearts of the desired.<sup>7</sup> There is a magical rite in the AV.<sup>8</sup> in which the bride binds the lover with her hair; this symbolically means that the lover will be truly hers and hers alone. Various domestic rites<sup>1</sup> are also prescribed by the AV. to be performed by the maiden; these are calculated to help her in love-affairs. While the maiden, anxious for having her lover, takes recourse to various love-charms and other domestic rites, the parents perform for her good the rites<sup>2</sup> named Rākāholākā, Kumārīyajña and the Saṭoddharaṇa. As to the interpretation of Rākāholākā, Devapāla<sup>3</sup> cites different opinions; however the rite is celebrated in the morning for the happiness of the maiden in order that the marriage of the maiden may draw nigh. Brahmadarśana<sup>4</sup> says Holākā is a famous rite in the Central Provinces as well as in Kāśmīra, wherein a fire is kindled near the gate of the house; after the ājyabhāgānta, the main oblation is offered with the Mantra 'yāste Rākā' etc. The Kumārīyajña<sup>5</sup> also is celebrated for the happiness of the maiden in the place where she dresses herself. After the ājyabhāgānta, the sacrifice is offered with the Mantra 'Indrāṇīm āsu nārīṣu'; etc. The Saṭoddharaṇa<sup>6</sup> is performed for a betrothed girl during the Sīmantonnayana ceremony of a pregnant wife. The symbolic meaning of the rite is, therefore, nothing but praying for similar fortune of the girl also.

In this rite the hair of the maiden is parted in a charming manner and anointed with cosmetics and adorned with sarvoṣadhi (a mixture of different herbs) and saffron. Ādityadarśana says<sup>1</sup> herein the plating of the hair should be ceremonially performed with mantras; during the Anavalobhana<sup>2</sup> (the rite for preventing disturbances that bring on danger to the embryo) which is to take place together with the Simantonayana of the same pregnant wife, the hair of the maiden should be parted in a charming manner, but this parting should be hardly seen. Thus every tender care is taken that the maiden may get a suitable husband and be happy in marriage while she herself prays to Agni and other gods to win the heart of her lover or if she has none, to have a suitable husband.

Just as the mother is the highest object of veneration and the wife is of love, so the daughter is of affection<sup>3</sup> and tenderness. A pretty girl is symbolic of good luck.<sup>4</sup> Eight girls represent eight objects of good luck during the consecration ceremonies of kings or crown-princes.<sup>5</sup> At times sixteen of them participate in similar ceremonies.<sup>6</sup> The goddess of Fortune and Beauty resides in their bodies.<sup>7</sup> Even a sight of her averts evil.<sup>8</sup>

Parents get the daughter after much longing and penance as the self of Blessing,<sup>9</sup> and it is only natural that they would rear her up with as much care as the son.<sup>1</sup> The supposition of Schrader<sup>2</sup> and others<sup>3</sup> that the depositing of the cooking vessels during the final bath (Avabhṛtha) after Somayāga refers to the adherence of Vedic people to female infanticide is not tenable. In the Soma sacrifice the cooking vessels are considered as females and the wooden vessels named vāyavyas as males. Now, the Taittirīya,<sup>4</sup> Maitrāyaṇī<sup>5</sup> and Kāṭhaka saṃhitās<sup>6</sup> make similar remarks that as the sacrificer and his retinue carry vāyavya vessels depositing the sthālīpātras in the bathing place, the daughter is deposited after birth while son is lifted up. The difficulty arises in connection with the right interpretation of the word Parāsyanti. In his article in ZDMG, Boethlingk says "As 'As' with prepositions is used not only to imply 'to throw', but also to mean 'to place, to lay', we may very well translate "Parāsyanti" by 'put aside', perhaps among others also by 'hand (the child) over immediately to the person waiting for the child'.<sup>7</sup> As against 'Parā-as' meaning 'to expose', the same scholar publishes the fragment of a letter from Prof. Roth who regrets, on his reading Delbrueck's Die indische Verwandschaftsnamen, that the seed of this error was planted by him in the Dictionary under As with Parā.<sup>1</sup> Boehtlingk also says that Delbrueck was pleased with, and had nothing to say against, his article.<sup>2</sup> Jolly also accepts the view of Boehtlingk in his excellent work "Recht und Sitte"<sup>3</sup>. The Vedic Index<sup>4</sup> also accepts Boehtlingk's view. Schrader,<sup>5</sup> however, is not satisfied with the explanation of Boehtlingk, and thinks that in common with other Aryan people ancient Indians also practised female infanticide. Boehtlingk<sup>6</sup> is justly sympathetic when he says "It hurt me to attribute to the ancient Indians such a piece of barbarism," but gives us sound reason later on. "Then I thought the matter in itself was very improbable, because without a girl the highest blessing of an Indian, viz. the begetting of a son, could not be achieved. As the lifting up of a boy after his birth is to be considered as an expression of joy, so is it easy to presume by Parāsyanti a corresponding expression of disagreeable surprise". There is no doubt that the verb "parāsyanti" and "ud haranti" express contraries. Āśvalāyana<sup>7</sup> uses the verb "ud hṛ" in the sense of "lifting up" when he says "noddharet prathamam pātram", etc; 'Yadā vā tu uddhṛtam pātram", etc; here, too, this verb in the passages in question means the same. The text in the Taittirīya clearly says the boy is lifted up (ut pumāṃsam haranti) and therefore as a contrary action the girl would be deposited, be kept on the ground and not thrown away; this is only in keeping with the comparison given—the Soma vessels are lifted up and as a contrary action the cooking vessels are allowed to stay on the ground and evidently are not thrown away. These sacrificial utensils are held as pure and are the last objects in the possession of the sacrificer to be thrown off.

The passage in the Maitrāyaṇī-saṃhitā seems to have been quoted by Yāska in his Nirukta.<sup>1</sup> Durga<sup>2</sup> in his R̥jvartha says expressly अथ यत् स्थालीं परास्यन्ति हवनकर्मणो न तथा जुहति न दाहमयं परास्यन्ति हवनकर्मणो दाहमयेनैव जुहति तस्मात् स्त्रियं जार्ता परास्यन्ति परस्मै प्रयच्छन्ति न पुमांसम् i.e. so as the cooking vessel is deposited, in the offering of oblations no offering is made with it and the wooden vessel is not deposited, in the offering of oblations offerings are made with the wooden vessel only,—the daughter born is given away to others and not the son. Skandasvāmin<sup>3</sup> also gives a similar interpretation. Sāyaṇa also understands by स्त्रियं परास्यन्ति वरकुले परित्यजन्ति. The learned commentators do all think that the daughter is given away and evidently, given away to her husband's family and this act is symbolically performed after the birth of the daughter by handing her over to a third person. In their opinion, female infanticide is out of the question. This Parāsana simply shows much anxiety, even from her birth, of the parents to do the best service to their daughter—to make her happy in marriage and nothing more than that. This simply shows that the parents were saddened at heart at the remembrance of the painful day when they would be compelled to be robbed of their beloved treasure by the bridegroom as Bāṇabhaṭṭa has so beautifully put it in both the Harṣa-carita and the Kādambarī. The question of her future happiness also weighed heavily with them. Viṣṇuśarma has excellently given vent to this parental worry in his Mitrabheda, 28. 6— पुत्रीति जाता महतीह चिन्ता कस्मै प्रदेयेति महान्वितर्कः । दत्ता सुखं प्राप्स्यति वा न वेति कन्यापितृत्वं खलु नाम कष्टम् ॥ The Kathāsaritsāgara is the unequivocal champion of the cause of women<sup>1</sup> and when it states—शोककन्दः क्व कन्या हि क्वानन्दः कायवान् सुतः (28. 6.), it simply repeats the above idea. Kālidāsa expresses this sentiment of parents, probably, most beautifully:—अर्थो हि कन्या परकीय एव तामद्य संप्रेष्य परिग्रहीतुः । जातो ममायं विशदः प्रकामं प्रत्यर्पितन्यास इवान्तरात्मा ॥

It will also be seen in this connection that at the time and in the place where these Texts were composed females, probably, exceeded the males in number. The Maitrāyaṇī<sup>2</sup> qualifies the Parāsana of the daughter with the statement “Striya eva atiricyante”. The Tait. Samh. says one man can very well have two wives but not one woman two husbands. How could the females supersede the males in number if female infanticide had been the custom?

Schrader's<sup>2</sup> remark that the Greeks also practised exposition is distinctly opposed to the theory of Cook,<sup>3</sup> who fights out his cause to show that the current idea as to exposition is "totally unfounded." Schrader<sup>4</sup> again gives us an analogy in favour of his theory that the old were also exposed. Analogy is no valid proof. Moreover, the reference in AV. XVIII. 2.34 is to the dead men, and not to the old; as regards Praskaṇva on whom Parśadvana took pity (RV. VIII, 51, 2. Vālakhilya III, 2) it is only to be supposed that Praskaṇva was expelled for some crime or other and in his exile he grew old and decrepit. The exposure of the old is quite incompatible with the repeatedly mentioned wish of the Vedic people to live the full extent of life (i.e. 100 years).

The Nirukta<sup>5</sup> holds that the excellent Vedic Mantra "You are produced from each and every limb, you are born from the heart; verily, you are the Self named son; so may you live hundred years" is applicable equally to both the children and no distinction is to be made whatsoever. Durga<sup>1</sup> in his R̥jvartha says as the same rite is observed for the daughter as well as the son and they both are born from each and every limb and the heart, no distinction is to be made, i.e., they are equal. Manu<sup>2</sup> says the son is equal to one's self and the daughter is equal to the son and repeats the same view emphatically when he says the son's son and the daughter's son have no difference<sup>3</sup> with respect to worldly matters as well as to sacred religious observances and no distinction is to be made between them as the daughter's son is equally fit to save the grand-father (and therefore, the grand-mother too) in the other world like the son's son.<sup>4</sup> Bhīṣma also declares the son is just the same as the daughter—they are both one's very self.<sup>5</sup> In xiii. 47. 25f., the Mahābhārata again declares the daughter equal to the son. The Law Literature also advocates the same opinion specially stating that both are born of the same limbs and have reasonably the same rights over paternal property.<sup>6</sup>

Thus we see that the daughter has in no way a less honoured or responsible position than the son in Vedic Ritual. The parents long to get her and perform all the Saṃskāras for her as for the son. She has the same rights as the son to wear family locks, to have the upanayana, to utter the Vedic mantras together with the Praṇava and to perform all the rites in relation to her parents. The son, has, no doubt, precedence over her in several rituals, particularly the Antyeṣṭi, but this is because she is to care more for her husband's family than her parents' and cannot be supposed to have as much privilege as the son. Moreover, she belongs to the gotra of her husband after the Caturthī-karma for which privilege and honour she prays to Agni and performs various domestic rites, the Mother-Instinct being supreme in her. This principle is pronounced remarkably in the fact that the younger sister has precedence over her if the former is unmarried. In case of her death before marriage, the same rights are performed as for the son; but if she is married, her own people do everything for her; still the ceremonial shows that her parental connection is also much cared for. In matrimonial affairs she is as free as the son and has the same rights as he. Nowhere does the Vedic Ritual ignore her importance. On the contrary, the unmarried daughter—Purity, Affection and Bliss embodied—seems to be more important than the son with regard to the welfare of the parents. Anyway, the hypothesis enunciated by Manu and other authorities meaning "Putreṇa duhitā samā" remains true and declares the glory of the Creator who does not make any distinction between His sons and daughters.

It is quite in keeping with the above spirit of the Vedic Religion that the Vedic seers as well as the Smārtas offer the daughter a substantial share, if not an equal share, with her brother in the property of the father.

A daughter (having brother) in her unmarried state is found claiming her share in her father's estate during the the early Vedic period.<sup>1</sup> According to some school as quoted in the Nirukta,<sup>2</sup> the daughter is entitled to half the property of her father, her brother being entitled to the other half. Yāska in this connection quotes as the authority of this school<sup>3</sup> the well known Vedic verse as quoted above<sup>4</sup> as well as another verse refering to the opinion of Manu.<sup>5</sup> Even at a later period the same spirit prevails in as much as Śukra in his Smṛti advocates that if the father divides his property during his life-time, he should do so amongst his sons, wife, daughters and daughters' sons. He should give the daughters half the property, of which one half should go again to her children.<sup>6</sup> If the property is not divided during the life time of the father and is, therefore, subsequently subdivided among the inheritors after his demise, the brothers should get less than half, as the mother gets one-fourth of the property and more than that goes to the sister.<sup>1</sup> Viṣṇu<sup>2</sup> and Nārada<sup>3</sup> also uphold this view with the amendment that only unmarried daughters are entitled to their fathers' shares. Even in later times the law-givers<sup>4</sup> ordained one-fourth share for the daughter, as her brothers must spend this for her marriage.

Again, in the Vedic period, a daughter without a brother could be adopted as a Putrikā in which case she practically became a son. That is why Vaśiṣṭha<sup>5</sup> mentions the "Putrikā" as the third in the list of inheritors in his Dharma-śāstra. A Putrikā is met with in subsequent times as well. Jayāpīḍa's wife Kalyāṇadevī was looked upon as the Putrikā of her father. As the daughter could be substituted as son, an adopted son during the Vedic age was hardly a necessity. From the religious point of view as well, the son of a daughter is as good as that of a son as both can perform all the obsequial ceremonies for their grand-father with equal right and credit.<sup>1</sup> The R̥gveda<sup>2</sup> bears a record of the inheritance of a daughter without brother; this principle has been adhered to in the Mahābhārata<sup>3</sup> as well as several Smṛtis<sup>4</sup> and the Artha-Sāstra of Kauṭilya.<sup>5</sup>

The MBh. (xii. 33. 45) declares outright that the daughters will be entitled to become rulers if there be no sons.

We have seen before that women were the seers of the hymns of the R̥gveda<sup>6</sup> and were Brahmvādīnīs; as late as the Upaniṣadic period women scholars proved equal to the sages of outstanding fame like Yājñavalkya in public debates.<sup>1</sup> Women of this age e.g. Maitreyī, wife of Yājñavalkya—quite in keeping with their Vedic learning, aptly declared that they cared for nothing else than the Highest knowledge.<sup>2</sup> Women are born students of theology; the two daughters of Dākṣāyaṇa are typical examples.<sup>3</sup> The keen interest of women in theology is also manifest from the Therīgāthā where they are found sworn to attain Nirvāṇa at any cost.<sup>4</sup> The Mahābhāṣya shows that women attained fame as Mīmāṃsakas or theologians as well; the lady specialists of the Kāśakṛtsna came to be known as Kāśakṛtsnās.<sup>5</sup> The Mahābhāṣya specifically mentions the group of women grammari-

6. The dance of women was a normal and pleasant affair in certain rituals; e.g. the wedding ceremony. Four or eight women, certainly maidens of the family, had to dance in it. (ŚāṅkGs. 1. 11. 5) They sang (gāthās) in weddings and other Vedic rituals;

connoisseurs of these arts. Thus, by singing and dancing, gods are said to have won over the goddess of speech and disappointed the demons who did not know the art of winning over women.

Even in subsequent ages women have not contributed a little to the various branches of Indian learning.<sup>1</sup> If the country would have provided all the facilities to women as in the Vedic ages throughout the long history of Indian Civilization, the fate of the country would have been quite otherwise. In all ages we could have expected many Ghoṣās, Viśvavārās, Śilā Bhaṭṭārikās, Prāṇamañjarīs, Lakṣmīdevīs and so on. Asahāya, commentator of the Nārada-smṛti, has rightly remarked that the inferiority of women (in subsequent ages) is due to the suppression of their educational facilities — शास्त्राध्ययनानधिकारित्वाच्छास्त्रमात्रोपजीविधर्मार्थमज्ञानाभावाद-स्वातन्त्र्यम् । When one looks at the long series of the works of women that have survived the ravages of time<sup>1</sup>, one cannot but sigh very long for the travesty of fate India dragged the Patni-sāmans or wives' song had a recognized position. The Śat Brā. XIV. 3. 1. 35. says explicitly—पत्नीकर्मव तेजस कुर्वन्ति यदुदगातः । Even in the postvedic period, much importance is attached to the skill of woman in Music and Art. Of the 64 arts described in the Kāma-Sūtra, the most important are Music and Dance (1.5.16). Heroines in Sanskrit dramas are very clever in singing. The Kathāsaritsāgara specifically states that society girls used to dance before a select audience. The Kāma-sūtra (U. 1) shows that girls used to go to dramatic concerts, etc. with their elders or lovers.

herself into by minimising the position of her women and curtailing their educational facilities.

A question at once arises: What are the causes that led to the deterioration in the position of women?

Because of the development of the caste-system (a solitary reference to which is found in the Puruṣa-sūkta of the Ṛg-veda) throughout the Vedic and postvedic periods till it reached the most astonishing complications in the Smṛtis, the social and personal freedom of women had to be curtailed. After all, love knows no law and the women in the Upaniṣadic period even were very learned. A learned woman falling in love with somebody of the prohibited caste could not but marry him and co-education did not play an insignificant part in it.<sup>1</sup> In early periods of the development of the caste-system, social leaders used to frighten such learned ladies with tortures in hell, not only for herself but also for her agnates and cognates inclusive of her parents. In spite of these social regulations learned women, to whom their love meant their whole existence, did not, certainly, go by the ideal superimposed upon them. And necessarily, the patrons of religion, who were dwarfed in divinity only by an earthly existence, had to stifle them to a staggering death by slowly tightening the rope of violent injunctions.

1. Thus, Ātreya was a class-mate of Lava and Kuśa, vide Uttara-Rāma-carita, Act II; Kāmandakī was a class-mate of Bhūrivasu and Devarāta. In big hermitages, venerable sages certainly used to teach the male and female students together. Again, girl-students often resided with the family of a teacher the same number of years as the boys; cf. Ambā's residence with the Śaikhāvaryas.

Scholars have reasonably suspected that the joint family system is a later development. There is no trace of it in the early Vedic period. Formerly, sons as well as daughters left the parents after marriage; but now when the joint family system developed, only daughters had to leave their parents after marriage. Sons, as members of the family, contributed to its welfare or suffered the same fate as the family might be driven to. Daughters had not to bother about the parent's family after the full-fledged development of the joint family system. So the daughter was considered a lesser necessity.

The increasing difficulties of giving the daughters in marriage owing to the development of rigorous caste-system and joint-family system brought about economic difficulties not known before. Economic cause played no insignificant part in determining the position of women in subsequent ages. In ancient India, there was no reason for the excessive worry of parents; no fear of unwanted life-long miseries on account of interminable widowhood, no anxiety for obligatory marriage within a limited number of years, nothing of the sort. A woman's life was as free as that of a man. The passages that breathe of anxieties on the part of parents simply show that the daughters, as natural, were objects of great care and affection.<sup>1</sup> Matters, however, became quite different in subsequent ages.

CHAPTER II

The Chief Wife In The Vedic Ritual

The first wife only is the patnī in the fullest sense of the term. She is the dharmapatnī while even the second wife (and naturally all other wives) is meant for sexual satisfaction only: a second wife is entitled to no unseen (adr̥ṣṭa) religious merit.<sup>1</sup> A man having several wives is required to observe his religious duties with first wife only; preference is however, sometimes given to the savarṇā wife so much so that even though she may be the youngest, he will observe religious duties with her and in case the savarṇā, be she the youngest, is not present or unable to attend, the claim would devolve upon one coming from the class immediately lower. A Sūdrā wife is always to be excluded by a Brāhmaṇa.<sup>2</sup> According to Manu<sup>3</sup> it is the first wife who is to attend personally and help the husband in his daily religious rites; he cannot show preference to other wives in these matters for fear of being a Caṇḍāla Brāhmaṇa. The Karmakāṇḍa-pradīpa<sup>4</sup> also says that only the first wife has the adhikāra. Disparagement of marriages other than the first is expressed in the fact that during the second and following marriages, the polygamist is to marry a pitcher (kumbha)<sup>5</sup> or some such thing. According to Yājñavalkya, too, the religious rites should be performed with the first wife of the same caste, not with others.<sup>1</sup> Rites observed for the highest religious merit or salvation are to be observed with the first wife.<sup>2</sup> Highest results (such as obtaining heaven, etc.) may be achieved only if the rite is performed along with the first wife.<sup>3</sup> The wife first married is to be considered as the eldest, not the one who is the oldest of the lot;<sup>4</sup> the Sat. Br.<sup>5</sup> says she is the consecrated consort.

Even though other wives are allowed to join in the sacrifice, it is the first wife who performs all the important rites. In the Darśapūrṇamāseṣṭi she trims the fire,<sup>6</sup> husks and pounds the rice.<sup>7</sup> After the Patnīsannahana (girding with the yoktrapāśa) and Gārhapatyopasthāna the wives are required to sit to the north of the Gārhapatya; the Mukhyapatnī occupies the seat exactly to the north, i.e. the best seat while other wives take their seats somewhere to the north of the

If for some reason or other the wife could not be present the Agnidhra or some other priest might do this for the wife; Sat. ŚS. p. 132, I. 23; Āp. ŚS., I, 20, 13; 70.

Gārhapatya, no doubt, but at a distance from the first wife.<sup>1</sup> After the Patnīsaṃyāja the chief is to eat the Iḍā<sup>2</sup> If simultaneously God-speed is to be wished now for the husband and the wife, it should be desired for the chief wife<sup>3</sup> only. Towards the close of the sacrifice the kuśa grass is removed from the lap of the wife and the cord with which she was girded is loosened; according to the Śāṅkhāyana school,<sup>4</sup> only the first wife is to observe these rites. During the utterance of the Saṃpatnīya it is the first wife who is to touch the husband as this act is meant for "Parārtha or Supreme Bliss."<sup>5</sup>

In the Agnyādhāna and the Agnihotra only the first wife, so long as she is living, is entitled to participate. The newly-married couple establish the sacred fires and observe the Agnihotra in the same fire till the end of the life of one of them. If the first wife is dead, the widower may marry and establish the fires again. But in no case, after the Agnyādhāna, should the first wife be deprived of her right of participating in the Agnihotra, even if she be deficient in religious performance or in procreation. On account of her assistance in the kindling of the fires she has been for her life associated with and given to the service of these fires.<sup>1</sup> The fires are inseparable from her; so long as she is in the house, they are there; when she goes with her husband to a foreign place, they move with her.<sup>2</sup> So long as the husband lives without his wife and consequently, without the fires, be it even in the next village, it is nothing but living in a foreign land but when the wife and her constant companions, the Fires, go with him, even the most distant land will not be considered as such (pravāsa).<sup>3</sup> If in any case the wife does not go with him, he must go without the fires and when he comes back he offers oblations to them but in order that they may be thoroughly pleased, he is to please the wife with his look.<sup>4</sup>

Before the Agnihotra actually begins, the wife cleanses the surrounding areas of the fires;<sup>5</sup> from the beginning to the end of the sacrifice she remains sitting to the south or the south-east of the Gārhapatya fire.<sup>6</sup> There can be

Of this water he pours half on Earth and the other half he pours into the hands of the wife. In case of her absence from the sacrifice on account of unavoidable circumstances the whole quantity of the fourth ladleful or of the fourth portion of the same ladleful according to Bharadvāja, is to be twice poured, upon the seat of the wife or the Earth. In no case should this water be poured into the hands of any other wife.<sup>4</sup> The object of this pouring is to pray for domestic bliss and

At the end of the evening oblation the wife together with her husband should observe silence and fast till darkness has set in.<sup>7</sup>

As in the Vaiśvadeva, so in the Varuṇapraghāśas, it is the first wife who should husk the barley, and deposit the husk for the Avabhṛtha.<sup>8</sup> She should make the Karambhapātras out of the barley-powder which she should herself make of unfried barley.<sup>9</sup> Some schools, however, empower her to husk the barley on the previous day, fry them a bit on the Anvahāryapacana, pound them and make Karambhapātras out of the powder.<sup>10</sup> As a rule, the Adhvaryu and the Pratiprasthātr make a ram and a ewe respectively with their sex marks made prominent.<sup>11</sup> But according to the Vājasaneyā Ritual<sup>12</sup> the wife should, after having made the Karambhapātras, make the ram and the ewe, too, of the barley similarly fried and powdered. These rites should be observed by the chief wife alone as these are by no means Strīsaṃskāras; moreover, in making the ram and the ewe, she is really a substitute of the priests, which other wives cannot be supposed to be. These are Parārthaka rites and as such, only the chief wife should observe them.

After the rite of the declaration of paramours, the wife invokes the Maruts<sup>13</sup> when she is led by the Pratiprasthātṛ. She is offered the Karambhapātras<sup>14</sup> in a winnowing basket which she places on her head. Both the sacrificer and the wife<sup>15</sup> now pass between the altars and seat themselves in front of the Dakṣiṇa fire with their faces towards the west. The wife gives these dishes to the sacrificer which he in his turn places on his head.<sup>16</sup> The husband utters the Anuvākya.<sup>17</sup> Then both the husband and the wife offer oblations to the Maruts<sup>18</sup> to expiate their sins which they have incurred either in village or the wild, in company or corporeal sense, etc., the dedicatory formula<sup>19</sup> being

In the Avabhr̥tha it is the chief wife who should wash the back of the sacrificer and he should, in his turn, wash her back too.<sup>22</sup> They offer their drenched garments to whomsoever they like.<sup>23</sup> The chief wife joins the priests and the sacrificer in the Sun-worship, and in adding fresh fuel to the Ābhavaniya fire.<sup>24</sup>

In the Sūkamedha the chief wife cooks the sacrificial food on the Southern Fire and participates later on with all others in eating it.<sup>25</sup> In the Traimbaka oblation after the sacrificer and priests, etc., and the maidens have walked round the fires, she lays fuel on and worships the Gārhapatya.<sup>26</sup>

In the animal sacrifice the chief wife anoints the surface of the sacrificial post while the sacrificer anoints the top of it. She rubs all over the post in order to impart to it lustre without omitting to rub any part of it.<sup>27</sup>

The prime duty of the wife in this sacrifice is to wipe the organs of the animal so that its soul (literally, the lives here) may rest in peace,<sup>28</sup> and this is done by the chief wife.<sup>29</sup> Before she proceeds, she, with a water-jar in her hands, worships the Sun.<sup>30</sup> During her advance towards the cātvāla the Pratiprsthātr prays for offspring and increase of wealth. Then she propitiates and takes water from the cātvāla. She also recites mantras for propitiating the sacrifice and then wipes each organ of the animal with appropriate mantras.<sup>31</sup> According to some, she pours the water on the organs and the Adhvaryu wipes them or he pours water and she wipes them. After cleansing the victim, she purifies herself at the pit along with the utterance of a mantra.<sup>32</sup>

After the Patnīsamīyā she offers the killer the front leg and the Adhvaryu some front piece.<sup>33</sup> During the idā-bhaksāṇa the sacrificer first gives the idā to her and she hands it over to the Adhvaryu or some other priest.<sup>34</sup> The sacrifice ending, while all others worship the Āhavanīya, she adds fresh fuel to and worships the Gārhapatya.<sup>35</sup>

The wife together with the other wives, the sacrificer and the priests sit round the seventh foot-print wherein a piece of gold is laid. After due offerings the Adhvaryu takes one-third portion of the dust from there and hands it over to the sacrificer with the blessings for the latter's wealth. The sacrificer gives it to the chief wife<sup>36</sup> so that she may have wealth ; while it is being given to her she prays that she may not be deprived of wealth. It seems only the first wife should hold on to the cart from behind;<sup>38</sup> because this is no Patnī-saṃskāra. By this rite the chief wife, as the household gear and as the approver of her husband's gift<sup>39</sup> honours the king Soma as a very worthy guest when he is brought forward on a car. While she does so, the Adhvaryu offers the water libations to the guest Soma. Or she may herself with her own hands make the offering or while the priest offers, she may present to the guest the Vaiṣṇava Navakapāla with her own hands.<sup>40</sup>

It is the chief wife who anoints the axles of the Soma-carts;<sup>41</sup> the object is to have children with heroic deeds.<sup>42</sup> While the Adhvaryu walks out of the hall by the front door with clarified butter taken a second time in four lad-

According to Baudhāyana,<sup>44</sup> she mixes half of the dust of the third foot-print with it. Then she anoints the right axle of the southern cart with her right hand.<sup>45</sup> According to Āpastamba<sup>46</sup> she may anoint this axle twice. Now, in order that she may anoint the axle of the northern car, she is made to walk round by the back of the Gārhapatya fire to the wheel-tracks on the north side. This time, the assistant of the Adhvaryu observes the same rites as the Adhvaryu in the previous case, and pours the residue of clarified butter after his offerings, into her folded palms. According to Baudhāyana she mixes up the remaining dust with it. According to certain Śākhās of the W.YV., she puts a log of wood on the Gārhapatya fire without the utterance of any mantra<sup>56</sup> in the Pravargya sacrifice.

In the Agnicayana the first wife makes the Ukhā, the fire-pan to which she prays for offspring; increase of wealth, cattle, horses and also for making the fellows of the sacrificer subject to him.<sup>57</sup> She also makes from clay Āśāḍhā, the invincible brick, and marks it with three lines.<sup>58</sup>

In the Vājapeya, the garland of gold which forms the fee should be worn by the chief wife only, as this is a rite producing highest results. The fee would pave the way of the wife as well as of the sacrificer to Heaven.<sup>59</sup> After twelve Āpti and Klpti offerings have been offered on the Āhavanīya fire for procuring for the sacrificer all that the twelve months of the year and the six seasons can bestow, the Neṣṭṛ or the Pratīprasthāṭṛ makes the chief wife wear garments of Darbha grass or Caṇḍātaka or Dṛhara<sup>60</sup> while the sacrificer wears silken garment.<sup>61</sup>

The Nestr then leads her to the post against which a ladder having seventeen stairs has been put. The sacrificer now gets ready to mount the post and enquires about her willingness to accompany him.<sup>62</sup> She replies in the affirmative. Thrice the sacrificer asks and thrice she replies.<sup>63</sup> The sacrificer now wishes that he should mount for both of them to which she readily consents. She may herself mount the post if she likes<sup>64</sup>. She should also look down to the ground and pray for offspring and increase of wealth.<sup>66</sup> If she does not accompany her husband, she is looked at by him from above after he has reached the top.<sup>67</sup> If she accompanies him, he helps her in descending from the post.<sup>68</sup> It is the

In the Pinḍapitṛyajña the eldest wife stands on the black deer-skin with her face towards the south-east and husks the paddy in a wooden mortar. She must not sit. She removes the husk by means of a winnowing basket, but does not separate the husked from those which are still not done. She husks them only once.<sup>72</sup>

At the beginning of the Horse-sacrifice which occurs on the eighth or ninth of the month of Phālguna, the chief queen and the king prepare themselves for ritual observance in the regular way as they do in other sacrifices. They cook for themselves food for breaking fast mixed with clarified butter as well as milk and eat it (in the afternoon) and wash their mouths in a golden bowl.<sup>74</sup> Then they keep silent and perform Agnihotra in due time. According to Baudhāyana all the queens are allowed to wear silver ornaments<sup>75</sup> for the occasion; but the chief queen wears several ornaments in addition which signifies her power over man in general.<sup>76</sup> According to Kātyāyana all the wives should wear golden ornaments.<sup>77</sup> But the distinctive position of the chief queen is seen in the fact that the one hundred maidens that accompany her must be either daughters<sup>78</sup> or wives<sup>79</sup> of kings; while the maidens of the Vāvātā are to be daughters or wives of subordinate Chiefs, or of the Ugras;<sup>80</sup> those of Parivṛkti, daughters or wives of Charioteers, and those of Pārāgalī, daughters or wives of Revenue Collectors. Agnihotra the Vāvātā avails herself of the coveted fortune of getting the king on her lap with his head towards the north;<sup>82</sup> this simply signifies the justification of her name "Vāvātā: the favourite" and nothing important so far as the supermundane bliss is concerned. The queens together with the maidens most probably help the king in keeping awake throughout the night. In other sacrifices as well as in this it is the chief queen who needs to keep awake along with the sacrifices and not all.

On the return of the horses on the second Soma-pressing day they are all bathed. Now the first three queens are to anoint the sacrificial horses and entwine pearls or coins into its mane and tail.<sup>83</sup> The order of anointing and entwining does not seem to be strictly observed.<sup>84</sup> The chief queen anoints the fore-parts, the favourite queen the middle and a discarded wife the hind-part. Again, the chief queen takes recourse to the Gāyatrī metre, the most important of all metres; the second, the Trīṣṭubh; Parivṛkti, the Jagatī. The stuff that the chief queen uses for anointing is clarified butter mixed with the sap of the sacred Pūtu-dru tree; that the Vāvātā uses is clarified butter mixed with the ordinary thing bdellium<sup>85</sup> and that the Parivṛkti uses is Ghee mixed with the sap of the Mustā plants that grows anywhere and everywhere. The companions that they have are the same as before. The varied rank of these maidens at once brings out the respective position of the queens. Again, during the entwining of pearls the chief queen adorns the parts in front of the place where the yoke rests with golden pearls; the Vāvātā below that and the buttocks with silver ones; the Parivṛkti below the buttocks with any and every pearl that may come from the sea.<sup>86</sup>

After the wild animals are released, the horse is killed, most probably, by stifling in robes. Then the Unnetṛ or Pratiprasthātṛ<sup>87</sup> or Adhvaryu<sup>88</sup> leads them up from their ordinary place near the Gārhapatya to the victim. They carry in their hands jars of water.<sup>89</sup> According to Satyā-ṣāḍha only the chief queen should be led by the Pratiprasthātṛ; so, other wives are to follow her.<sup>90</sup> In order to make amends for the slaughtering of the victim and to invoke the divine helpers to help the chief queen in the most important rite that follows,<sup>91</sup> they walk round the victim nine times while fanning him with the flutter of their garments; for the first three times they tie in a knot the right locks of hair and let loose the left ones and walk from right to left, simulating their right thighs; then they follow the exactly reverse course in all matters.<sup>92</sup> The chief queen, now, shows anxiety to approach the slain horse, who represents Prajāpati, in order to have seed from him. Then the chief queen lies down by the side of the horse. She, along with the utterance of mantras, makes various attempts while the Adhvaryu cloaks them together with garments. While she does the obscene act, she feels reluctant and censures the horse.<sup>93</sup> Three times the chief queen censures, three times the others persuade her. All sorts of indecent acts and talks are the concomitant factors of fertility spells;<sup>94</sup> here, too, for the sake of fertility, indecent colloquy between the priests, queen and maidens, etc. begin. According to several schools only the maidens reply.<sup>95</sup> According to *Śat. 96 XIII, 2, 9, 1-8. It will be seen in this connection that from the very beginning the chief queen is, from the ritualistic point of view, dedicated to the Brahman. Most probably there is no other reason here than this that the chief queen holding the highest position can be dedicated to Brahman only who is the most important of all priests; *Ap. the Vāvātā and the Chamberlain, the fourth wife. The different schools vary very much, but there is no doubt that all of these insertions and omissions are meant for the fertility of the chief queen. All other queens as well as their maidens join herein only as help-mates in the Fertility Rite which is the chief one in the Horse-sacrifice. At the end of the obscene colloquy the queen consort is raised up by her own maidens.<sup>97</sup> Now, the first three queens mark out with metal needles the lines for the dissection of the victim. Here, too, the chief queen has all the preferences. She marks the lines in the fore-part, down to the breast, while the Vāvātā does up to the navel and the Parivṛkti the rest. She, again, makes the knife-paths (Asipathas) with golden needles, while the second wife with silver ones and the Parivṛkti with iron or lead ones.<sup>98</sup> The scholiast on Satyāśāḍha<sup>99</sup> says in this connection that the chief queen, Vāvātā and the Parivṛkti, holding as they do the supreme, intermediate and worst position respectively, should, accordingly, mark out the knife-path in varying parts of varied importance—the chief queen in the fore-part, i.e. the most important part, the Vāvātā in the middle part and the Parivṛkti in the hind-part. She is the uttamā patnī and accordingly she has her own exclusive rights and in the remaining, too, she leads everywhere.

In the Rājasūya the chief queen is the permanent Ratnin in as much as authorities differ as to the reckoning of the Vāvātā and Parivṛkti as Ratnins, Jewels of the king.<sup>100</sup> The Śat. Br. reckons neither the Vāvātā nor Parivṛkti as Ratnin.<sup>101</sup> The king offers a pap for Nirṛti in the house of the Parivṛkti, not because she is a Ratnin, but because he likes to get rid of Nirṛti, calamity, while he is consecrated. As the Parivṛkti has no son, she is seized with Nirṛti; in order to propitiate Nirṛti, the king prepares a pap of black rice broken by nails with which to offer. According to Kātyāyana,<sup>102</sup> she is to betake herself to a Brāhmaṇa's house where the king has no power. The offering to Nirṛti, the use of black rice broken by nails and taking shelter in a Brāhmaṇa's house at once direct to the degraded position of the Parivṛkti: and it is only natural that a good many authorities, led by Śat. Br., do not recognise her as a jewel. Several authorities of the Taittirīya school recognise the Vāvātā as a Ratnin and recommend the offering of a pap

100 The Rājasūya practically ends with the Sunāsīriya offering; on the fourth to the fifteenth day after the Sunāsīriya, offerings called Ratumnām Havīṃṣi are offered in the house of the Jewels of the King, his wives and high officers. For the order of Ratnins, cf. Śat. Br., V, 3, 1; Tait. Br., I, 7, 3; Baudh. ŚS., XII, 5, 6; Āp. ŚS., XVIII, 10, 12—II, 23; Kāt. ŚS., XV, 3, 1-46; Kāt. Sam., XV, 4, 5; Mait. Sam., II, 6, 5, 6; etc.

to Bhaga in her house,<sup>103</sup> but this recommendation in her favour loses importance as no other Vedic school gives her the position of a Ratnin. According to all the authorities a pap to Aditi or Āditya is to be offered in the house of the chief queen. She offers a cow as the sacrificial fee of this rite.

It is the chief queen who is to sit touching the king in the offering of scrapings of the consecrated waters which is offered at the house of a favourite son.<sup>104</sup> While mounting the chariot for a symbolic conquest of the quarters (dig-vijaya) the king touches the chief queen and the horses with the tip of the bow so that by the quickening of the Maruts they might bring him victory and that he might be united with power.<sup>105</sup> This bow he hands over to the chief queen for safe preservation so that their (eldest?) son might be victorious by means of this (symbolic) bolt (vajra).<sup>106</sup>

While adoring the king, the Brahman hands over the sword to the king, which he again lets pass amongst the Ratnins from hand to hand. They touch the sword to assure the king of their faithfulness. The chief queen is the only wife who, in common consent of all the authorities, is entitled to touch the sword which is the symbol of unity

In the Human sacrifice,<sup>108</sup> too, the chief queen lies down by the side of the victim<sup>109</sup> as she does in the Aśvamedha. They are cloaked together under garments and the sacrificer exhorts her to do the obscene act. A similar colloquy as in the Aśvamedha follows. When it is finished, the Hotṛ and others<sup>110</sup> (most probably, the Udgātr, Adhvaryu and Brahman,<sup>111</sup>) raise her up. According to the Vaitāna only the Brahman is to do so. Now, the Hotṛ consecrates her with prayers in which he invokes the spirit of the parted sires (of the sacrificer);<sup>112</sup> the Udgātr consecrates her with the formulas in which he prays that the manes may live in happiness and sojourn during the sacrifice to the sacrificial place;<sup>113</sup> and the Adhvaryu with the prayer that she may live long and secure.<sup>114</sup> The Brahman makes her utter the Mantra in which she prays for the long life of herself as well as for her husband.<sup>115</sup>

In the Rāḍ-yajña<sup>116</sup> which has been mentioned in the Pañc. Brā. alone and is intended to restore a deposed king to his kingdom, the chief queen is one of the eight vīras who surround and sprinkle the celebrant.

Now, we set out the duties of the chief wife in establishing and keeping up of the sacred domestic fire. If the newly-married couple desire to establish and keep up fire from their marriage time,<sup>117</sup> they carry the Marriage Fire to their new house—or if they like to live under the same roof as the father, to that house, and establish it there. They constantly keep it up by offering morning and evening oblations. According to certain authorities,<sup>118</sup> it is only she, and not the husband, who should offer these oblations, because she is the House and this Fire is Domestic. Either of them seems, however, to be equally entitled to offer it;<sup>119</sup> it is only natural that in case of the absence or sickness of either, the other will offer. The presence of both, or at

If the fire goes out, she fasts;<sup>122</sup> according to Vaikhānasa,<sup>123</sup> performs a Kṛcchra. She also fasts if the time of kindling up the fire elapses.<sup>124</sup>

If the existence of the fire is interrupted for twelve days, it is to be re-established. The Vivāhājyāhuti, the Lājāhuti, the Gr̥hapraveśanīyāhuti, have to be repeated herein; however, the wife herself and not her brother offers the Lājāhuti now. According to Vaikhānasa, however, the rite of establishing fire is to be observed again if the husband and the wife remain without fire three days, and in this case the wife is required to undergo the Prājāpatya or Pādakṛcchra penance while the husband fasts one day.<sup>125</sup>

Either the chief wife or the husband offers the Bali,<sup>126</sup> but Gobhila<sup>127</sup> makes a special rule that the wife should offer in the evening and the husband in the morning. Naturally the option ceases if the husband is absent.<sup>128</sup> According to Bhāradvāja, it is only she who should offer the Vaiśvadeva, three times along with the utterance of the Yajus text and once silently.<sup>129</sup>

The cooking<sup>130</sup> and other preliminary things such as husking<sup>131</sup> are always done by her. Before beginning the cooking, she washes herself.<sup>132</sup> Having finished the cooking, she purifies herself by sipping water, etc., and in a sweet distinct voice reports to her husband that she has finished it.<sup>133</sup> The husband thanks her that it is well done, and prays that the food which is Virāt may not fall short. Then she removes the cooking vessel to a secure place, and cleanses the upper part with water and the lower with cow-dung. She now takes four fuels in her hand, sprinkles and offers them along with the utterance of the prescribed formulas.<sup>134</sup> She makes offerings in praise of everything that helps her cooking, all the quarters and innumerable gods. During the Nṛ-yajña, either the husband pours water and she washes, or she pours water and he washes; they wash with mutual help simply the portion of the leg under the knee.<sup>135</sup> Daily she propitiates thus the Guests, the Gods, the Beings, Brāhma, and the Manes.

According to Pāraskara, the husband and the wife may either take their meals together or the husband may take them earlier, but in any case they must partake of the remnant of the food after all the above-mentioned offerings.<sup>136</sup>

In the rites concerning the House, the chief wife enters first the newly-built house with a full jar on her head or lap<sup>137</sup>. It seems that only the chief wife as the mistress of the house should carry the jar. That she should enter first is indicative of her authority over the house; her decided authority over household affairs is also found in the statement that the wife is the house, occurring in various places<sup>138</sup>. Any way, it is certain that while entering the new house she heads the host of wives after whom come the husband and all others. It is on her lap that the husband should lie down and it is she whom the husband looks at again and again along with the prayer that they may together, in the house, overcome all hostile powers.<sup>139</sup> On this ceremonial day all the disputations are shunned by her as well as by others.<sup>140</sup>

After the animal has been killed in a domestic sacrifice, the chief wife bathes the apertures of the animal with water along with the utterance of the mantras.<sup>143</sup> With the water-jar in her hands she worships the Sun. The procedure is exactly the same as in the Śrautra rites.<sup>144</sup> At the end of the sacrifice the wife adds a fuel to the fire.<sup>145</sup>

At the end of the sacrifice, all the members of the household sit on straws and unwashed garments. According to Gobhila,<sup>160</sup> she sits immediately next to the sacrificer with her children on her lap or by her side; according to Āpastamba<sup>161</sup> she sits to his north. After this rite she descends together with her husband and children along with the utterance of the words, "Life, fame, strength, enjoyment of food, offspring." pāka,<sup>164</sup> food to be offered to the Manes with honour. As she is supreme in all matters concerning cooking and such other domestic affairs, it is she who is to do this.<sup>165</sup> Gobhila, as quoted in the Śrāddhakriyākaumudī<sup>166</sup> says she should, at the end of the cooking, say “finished”, after which the actual ceremony begins. Vyāsa,<sup>167</sup> as quoted in the Śrāddhakāśikā, says the wife should, after cooking, take a bath. It is she who is to serve food to the manes. Kṛkala’s manes incurred sins because Sukalā was deprived of her right to offer the cakes; and Dharma calls both him as well as the manes thieves.<sup>168</sup> The manes as well as the sacrificer, instead of acquiring religious merit, incur sin if the (eldest) wife does not serve during the Śrāddha, the food herself.<sup>169</sup> At the end of the ceremony she partakes with her husband of the remnants of food.<sup>170</sup>

she who washes all the fourteen apertures of the cow's body.<sup>171</sup> On the Anvaṣṭakya day she<sup>172</sup> places a stone in the Kuśa grass and pounds on that stone a fragrant substance called Sthagara,<sup>173</sup> grinds some collyrium<sup>174</sup> and anoints therewith three Darbha blades. These are placed underneath the seats of three Brāhmaṇas who are invited to the sacrifice.

In the Pitryajña she, accompanied by the sacrificer, pays reverence to the manes. She also prays to Agni Gārhapatya for releasing her from any sin she may have committed to atmosphere, earth, sky, mother or father.<sup>175</sup>

The true significance of the performance of rites lies in the eating of Idā. The eating of Idā leads to the end of the sacrifice, the sacrifice of life, the fulness of human life and ultimately to Prajāpati, Lord of Sacrifices, the Self of Sacrifices. The successful completion of domestic and social life of man, of the material and spiritual life, of his earthly and divine life, in a word, of his whole life—lies in this. The Christians observe this rite under the name of the Eucharistic sacrifice. In this sacrifice they offer bread and wine to Christ and by means of the utterrance of holy mantras these are transubstantiated into flesh and blood of Christ. The Christians form a Holy Communion with Christ by means of eating these flesh and blood of Christ.<sup>176</sup> This eating of the Idā in Vedic ritual is nothing but the observance of the Eucharistic sacrifice and forming a Holy Communion with Prajāpati, Lord of Sacrifices. In the Agnihotra the remnant of the milk offered is to be taken. In the New and Fullmoon sacrifices, etc., the remnant of the Puroḍāśa offering is to be eaten. In the animal sacrifice a portion of the meat offered is eaten. In the Soma sacrifice, the remnant of the Soma offered is to be drunk.<sup>177</sup> In the Baliharāṇa, the husband and wife take the remnant of the food remaining after the five daily sacrifices.<sup>178</sup> In all the Śrāddha offerings, the remnant of the food offered is to be eaten<sup>179</sup> In this eating of the Haviś-śeṣa, the Idā, only the chief wife is to participate, as this rite devolves on the wife and the sacrificer all that the Sacrifice may, and consequently, is a rite designed to help in the other world as well. In this rite all the priests and the sacrificer also participate and together with them, she forms a Holy Communion between Prajāpati, the Supreme Soul, and the establishers of the sacrificer.

The Position of Wives other than the first in the Vedic Ritual*

Though the wives other than the first have no right to participate in those rites which are meant for Supreme Bliss, they are, however, allowed to participate in those which are considered as Saṃskāras, and those which are meant only for earthly bliss (ārād upakāraka). The Patnī (chief wife) observes those rites as well as those which only she and none of the other wives, can perform. In the rites dealt with here the first wife has, unless otherwise mentioned, the first claim and precedence over other wives.

In the New and Full Moon sacrifices<sup>1</sup> all the wives of the sacrificer are either girded by the Agnīdhra priest, or they gird themselves.<sup>2</sup> They sit either to the north of the Gārhapatya<sup>3</sup> or to the south-west<sup>4</sup> with bent or raised knees. With the pres-

1 As a rule, the wives take a bath and adorn themselves for their participation in sacrifices. According to Bhāradvāja, as quoted by the Commentary on Āpastamba (II, 6, 12, p. 32) they should anoint themselves with cow-dung. Baudhāyana also recommends both adornment and anointment, and Pāṭhinaśi adds the smelling of scented flowers. Comm. on Āp.ŚS., 1.6.12, p. 23, vol. I.

4 The Sat.Brā. strictly forbids the wives to sit to the west of the sacrifice, with their faces towards the east, for in that case Adiā, cribed formula<sup>5</sup> a triple cord of Muñja known as yoktrapāśa is put round their waist, either outside or inside the garment.<sup>6</sup> The Śat. Brā.<sup>7</sup> warns that a knot must not be made, while the Tait. Brā.<sup>8</sup> insists upon making it. According to Kātyāyana and the Scholiast Karka<sup>9</sup> the Agnīdhra priest is to wind the cord round their waist from left to right and having fixed the southern end by twice twisting round the northern one, he draws the southern end to the encircling cord upwards so that it may hang down.

Then the wives worship Agni Gṛhapati and Devānām patnīḥ with the formula, "Agne gṛhapate upa mā hvayasva iti" and who always sits like that, might be displeased with them. By sitting somewhat to the south (cf. I. 3.1.17) of the Gārhapatya fire they propitiate Aditi.

Then they again sit to the north<sup>13</sup> or south-east<sup>14</sup> along with the utterance of the mantra “Indrāṇī iva avidhavā bhūyāsam” etc. Having taken seats, they mutter “Suprajas tvā vayam”, etc., “Mama putrāḥ śatruhanah,” etc. They sit there till the unloosing of the girdle.

At the end of the sacrifice the grass cords of the wives are to be united. As a preliminary to this rite the Hotṛ gives to the wives Kuśa grass along with the mantra “Vedo’si; Thou

The united cords<sup>20</sup> are placed on the hands of the wives and some Kuśa grasses are placed on them. A pitcher full of water is placed in front of the wives. Now water is poured on the grasses and the cord after which they place the grasses within the thigh.<sup>21</sup> They wash their mouths with the water from the pitcher<sup>22</sup> and pray for cattle, children, etc.<sup>23</sup> Then they worship Agni Gārhapatya which is the final rite.<sup>24</sup>

In the Varuṇapraghāśas the wives should be girded with grass-cords.<sup>25</sup> The Vaitāna Sūtra<sup>26</sup> says the wife should have a wash after the interrogation by Pratiprasthātṛ as to how many lovers she has. Though the Sūtras do not refer to any wash, the purificatory nature of the rite is in itself manifest and therefore, all the wives should observe this. Moreover, the rite seems to have been originally intended for keeping a check over the wife and for keeping the blood pure; so all the wives should be subject to the interrogation. They are to confess any illicit connections they have had, otherwise their kith and kin, near and dear ones, would die.<sup>27</sup> By declaring the names of their paramours or at least by giving out the number of the paramours by means of raising up as many stalks of grass,<sup>28</sup> they become themselves pure and cause their paramours to be seized by Varuṇa with his noose. If they have none, they straightly say so and the whole thing is then so clear.

After the husband and the chief wife have offered oblations with the Karambha-pātra, all the wives unite their grass-cords.<sup>29</sup> They all go now for the Avabhṛtha (final bath). They have baths, but do not put their heads under water; they simply pour water on their heads.<sup>30</sup> According to Kātyāyana and the Scholiast Karka<sup>31</sup> the spouses should repair to some quiet part of flowing water and take a bath in the above manner. The chief wife and the sacrificer should wash the backs of each other and most probably, the other co-wives might help one another in washing their backs.

In the Sākamedha i.e. the third parvan of the Cāturmāsya sacrifices, when all the preliminary things necessary for the sacrifice have been done, the wives are brought forward and made to sit near the sacrificer.<sup>32</sup> According to certain schools, here, unlike in other sacrifices, there is no girding of wives (Patnīsannahana) or any other accessory rite. According to Satyāśāḍha, the wife should look at the clarified ghee from her shed;<sup>33</sup> all the wives should do so as this is a part of the strīsaṃskāra. After the eating of the Idā, they should all anoint their eyes.<sup>34</sup> During the Tryambaka oblation, after the maiden has walked round the fire, the sacrificer pours into the hands of the wife the Māsara or rice-gruel, she in her turn pours this into the hands of the maiden along with the prayer that she (maiden) would achieve her object (Pati or Bhaga).<sup>35</sup>

The object of this rite is only to obtain happiness in this world alone, and not in the other which is clear from the fact that only a single Vedic school (Baudhāyana) follows it. It is only reasonable that the rice-gruel should be handed over to the maiden, longing for husband or beauty, by her own mother and not by the chief wife. This offering of the rice-gruel means most probably a joint conferring of blessings upon the daughter by the parents and no doubt, her mother should offer her the material carrying her own blessings.

In the Paśūyāga, too, the wives are to be girded, says Baudhāyana.<sup>36</sup> After the animal is killed, they are raised up by Neṣṭṛ<sup>37</sup> or Pratiprasthātṛ<sup>38</sup> from their seats to the altar. They all look at and worship the Sun<sup>39</sup> with the prescribed mantra. Then they are led one by one to the east along with the prayer for offspring and increase of wealth.<sup>40</sup> All of them

In the Agniṣṭoma the wives have their nails pared by a barber in such a way that they do not extend beyond the upper end of the finger tips; the paring should begin from the little finger of the left hand. They brush their teeth with bits of the udumbara twig, taking care that they may not bleed. They bathe in stagnant waters full of Rañkha and Avaka plants on mossy bathing ghats. According to the Vājasaneyā school they put a piece of gold in a pit and bathe therein. During their bath they invoke the waters for purifying them; while coming out, they mutter to themselves about the purity caused by the waters. Then they sip water. Unlike the priest, they are forbidden to have a hair-cut.<sup>42</sup>

During the consecration for a religious ceremony (Dīksā) they all wear on their heads nets made of thin silken thread or of wool collected from living rams or, at least, a net made of Kuśa grass;<sup>43</sup> these should hang on both sides of their head.<sup>44</sup> They are consecrated on their own seats with

During the girding they observe the same rites as in the New and Full Moon sacrifices (Darśapūrṇamāsa).<sup>47</sup> Herein Āpastamba prescribes that the mantra “Āśānā saumanasam, etc.: Beseeching favour,” etc.,<sup>48</sup> should be dropped and “Saṃ tvā nahyāmi, etc.: I bind thee, etc.,”<sup>49</sup> should be used while Baudhāyana recommends the use of both of them. The nets are now closely fitted in so that there may not be any chance of their loosening or falling down.<sup>50</sup> The Prati-prasthātṛ fastens pegs in the skirts of their clothes in order that they may scratch their skin, if required, with them.<sup>51</sup> They should not take meat and honey, nor do any impure act.<sup>52</sup>

According to Kātyāyana,<sup>95</sup> even though they may be very near, they should not look at the Pravargya; they should themselves cover their heads during the preparation. All the wives should observe this injunction, as otherwise it would be prejudicial to their own good; and as, according to the Mānava-śrauta-sūtra, this is really a strī-saṃskāra. They keep on looking at the Mahāvīra pot and pray to Him for cattle and offspring and a safe happy life to themselves as well as to their husband.<sup>96</sup> According to the Mānava-śrauta-sūtra,<sup>97</sup> the sacrificer also looks at it along with them.

carried away by attendants. They are to come back to the sheds when the Prastotr begins to sing the Sāman. He sings it three times, in the finale of which the wives<sup>100</sup> also join.

In the Piṇḍa-pitṛ-yajña the husband gives all the wives portions from the middle cake for having children. They all pray to the ancestors for children adorned with lotus-garlands.<sup>101</sup>

Now, we deal with the wives in general in the Domestic Rītual. The first sthālīpāka is really a part of the marriage ceremony and as such each wife is entitled to perform this rite. Each one should cook at other times, too, in so far as the cooking happens to be a part of any of the strī-saṃskāras. The wife takes her meal in the day time together with her husband and avoids meat, etc. During the night she sleeps on the floor and refrains from any impure act. Next day she cleanses thrice the sacrificial place with a duster and thrice all around the fire with water.<sup>102</sup> The husband, after having the paddy washed, spreads the hide of a black deer, places mill-stones thereon and pours some paddy into them. She husks the paddy thrice and gets the rice perfectly in order. She washes it thrice and cooks it. While cooking, she sprinkles clarified butter upon it by means of the purifying Kuśa grass.<sup>103</sup> The husband places this full cooking vessel on strewn grass. Then she sits to the left of her husband and to the west of the Gārhapatya fire, and offers to Agni and Agni Sviṣṭakṛt. After the offering the husband does all the cleansing work during this particular occasion, but during the Pūṃsavana, etc., she is required to cleanse the sacrificial staff, etc.<sup>104</sup>

As Garbhādhāna<sup>105</sup> is a strī-saṃskāra, each wife observes this rite.

It seems from his statement that the ritual as is described in his Kārikā differs from that of the Yajñopaniṣad.

In the Vaikhānasa-gr̥hya-sūtra III, 10, the Garbhādhāna is mentioned as distinguished from R̥tu-saṃgamana (III. 9), and the Pūṃsavana, according to this school, is to be held in the 4th month. But according to all other authorities who deal with the rite, it is the rite observed for having the wife's pregnancy. The Mantras uttered in this rite cannot mean otherwise. The R̥tu-saṃgamana does not find place in any other Gr̥hya-sūtra except the

The wife, on the night chosen for the rite, takes a bath and adorns herself with ornaments, clean clothes and

Vaikhānasa. This rite has, however, been given importance in the Prayogas, Paddhatis and specially in the Compendia.

Authorities differ whether the Garbhādhāna should be observed in each case of the wife's pregnancy, or it should be observed once for all. Thus, Bhaṭṭa Nārāyaṇa says "This sacrament purifying the womb named Garbhādhāna is in way of purifying the object itself. So, as the object, the wife, is once purified, and pregnancy that occurs in it (her), is purified. So this rite should be observed once only." So also is the case with "Puṃsavana and Simantonayana." But Karkopādhyāya holds the opposite view: "These three sacraments are to be repeated in every pregnancy, otherwise no saṃskāra of the following pregnancies is to be considered as observed." Again, Vijñāneśvara says, "Garbhādhāna should be observed in each case of the wife's pregnancy, but not Puṃsavana and Simantonayana." Sūlapāṇi says, "Simantonayana is not to be repeated, but Garbhādhāna and Puṃsavana are to be observed again and again." Tarkālankāra in the Commentary on Gobhila thinks that Garbhādhāna and Puṃsavana need be repeated in each pregnancy, but not Simantakarāṇa.

The question remains to be solved, if the Garbhādhāna is to be repeated in each case of the wife's pregnancy, and if the Puṃsavana rite should also be observed in that Ṛtu when the Garbhādhāna is also going to be performed. The Ṛtu-saṃgamana really serves the same purpose as the Garbhādhāna does. Moreover, from the treatment by several authorities of the Garbhādhāna, it seems that according to them the Garbhādhāna is but a ceremonial observance of the Ṛtu-saṃgamana for the pregnancy of the wife, failing which first the Nārāyaṇa Bali, and still failing, the Nāga Bali are to be observed. So there does not seem to be any necessity of the separate observance of the rite Ṛtu-saṃgamana in that monthly period of the wife when the Garbhādhāna is held.

When the wife comes, specially decorated for the ceremony, the husband presses out the juice into the right<sup>111</sup> or both<sup>112</sup> the nostrils of the wife with the appropriate verses of the R̥gveda (X. 85. 21-22).<sup>113</sup>

Nārāyaṇa Bhaṭṭa mentions that the husband should bathe the wife in the morning with the water from the pitchers adorned with five twigs with new leaves. After the bath the wife adorns herself with auspicious dress and ornaments. After the offerings of the Prājāpatya and the Ājya oblations, the head of the wife is touched. Agni and Āditya are worshipped and during the worship of the latter the wife joins her husband.

Kālesi in his Paddhati mentions that the juice of Śukaśimbi pressed out by ladies with husband and children living is to be sprinkled into the right nostril of the wife. The rite is to be observed only once. According to Vaikhānasa,<sup>114</sup> the husband should first of all, sprinkle the clarified butter upon the fire and then make the wife adorned with auspicious ornaments and clothes, sit down. After sacrificing oblations to Dhātṛ, Varuṇa and Agni Sviṣṭakṛt, the husband gives the wife some barley-corns. Then she is made to partake of the three-fold food (a mixture of the equal portions of milk, sour curds and melted butter). After the wife's ācamana (sipping water), the husband strokes her body from the navel upwards for three times with the stalk of a kuśa grass with the prayer for having a child as desired.

According to Baudhāyana,<sup>115</sup> if the husband and the wife want a "Śrotriya" son,<sup>116</sup> they are to worship Arundhatī, take unsalted food, lie on the floor and observe chastity for three nights. They wear unwashed clothes and ornaments every morning and evening, hold bow and arrow and worship fire during this period. On the 4th day they are to offer an oblation of cooked rice. If they want to have an Anūcāna<sup>117</sup> son they observe the vow for 12 days; if a Rṣikalpa<sup>118</sup> son, for

In the due period the wife takes her bath with a view to observing the rite. In the night the husband adorns her and utters the appropriate mantras. On the following day, the Nāpita-karma<sup>122</sup> is to be observed. The husband and the wife give the barber rice mixed with milk (rice pudding) and go towards the east or the north of the village. When they come across an Udumbara tree, they walk round it, sprinkle water on it and anoint it with scented things. Having covered it with flowers, they offer the Bali oblation. Then they go down into knee-deep water (in some pond), put fish in an unwashed cloth with the skirts stretched towards the bank and ask a Brahmacārin to tell what he sees. He replies that he sees sons and cattle. Then they offer these fish as Bali to herons. Now they throw off the flowers, etc., cast off the remnant of food, put off their clothes and hang them on the Udumbara twigs. They take a bath, wash each other's back and swim towards the deep of the water. Having anointed each other and worn red or unwashed clothes, they go home in a carriage or on foot, have a wash, sip water and begin to sleep without a word. Next morning they talk again during the Vaiśvadeva.

The Baudh G. Pariśiṣṭa<sup>123</sup> prescribes a different procedure. Here the husband, after entertaining Brāhmaṇas, worships the fire and offers oblations. Ājya oblations are offered to Sviṣṭakṛt. Then the husband and the wife partake of the rice which is offered to Savitṛ. Whatever they desire to obtain, they contemplate at that time. According to the Pāśupati-paddhati, the husband should, after his morning duties, make his wife sit to his right, and touch her heart with his hand stretched over her right shoulder and murmur the appropriate mantras. If after the performance of the rite as described the object is not achieved, the husband, during the next time unearths the root of a white-flowered Kaṇṭikāri and keeps it in some secret place. On the due date the husband and the wife fast. After nightfall, the wife, having worn unwashed clothes and sipped water sits to the left of her husband with her face, towards the east. He pounds the above-mentioned root with sprinkled water and sprinkles it into the right nostril of the wife. According to the school of Hiranyakeśin,<sup>124</sup> the husband and the wife should, after their morning duties, sip

123 II, 2, pp. 236-37.

124 The Gr̥hya Sūtra does not deal with the subject. But the Paddhatis, e.g., Samskāra-paddhati of Bhāskara Śāstrin, p. 40 f. and Samskāratramālā of Bhaṭṭa Gopinātha Dikṣita, p. 649 ff. deal with the Ritual.

water. While the husband performs the preliminary rites the wife adorns herself with clothes,<sup>125</sup> ornaments and flower-wreaths, anoints and embalms herself and chews betel. She should become thinner by means of Three Nights' observance or inadequate meals.

According to Bhaṭṭa Gopīnātha, commentator of Hiraṇyakeśi GS., under certain circumstances, the Śānti rite should be performed before observing the Garbhādhāna rite.

If the object be not achieved after the Garbhādhāna rite has been duly performed, the rites known as Nārāyaṇa Bali and Nāga Bali should be performed.<sup>126</sup> The former is for averting the evil influence of the demons and the second for being relieved of the sin incurred by killing a serpent or serpents in the previous birth. On the day chosen for the performance of the Nāga Bali, both the husband and the wife, with the things necessary for the performance of the rite, go to a holy place, wear clean garments, make a serpent of the powder of rice, sesamum, etc., place it on a winnowing basket and utter the propitiatory mantras.

The Samskāra-ratna-mālā also prescribes the gift of a golden cow and the hearing of the Hari-vaṃśa for removing the barrenness of the wife.

125 According to Gopīnātha, she should wear unwashed clothes.

126 For the rite, see Samskāra-paddhati, p. 42 f., Samskāra-ratna-mālā, p. 696 f.

Bhavadeva in his Paddhati says that after nightfall an oblation is to be offered to Sūrya first of all, and then, the mantras as mentioned above are to be uttered. The husband stands behind the wife who sits with her face towards the East. While uttering the mantras, the husband should stretch his right hand from behind on the right shoulder of the wife. Then he touches the navel of the wife with a piece of gold and mutters: "Omn. Be the mother of excellent long-living children. May you, O all-blessed one, be the nourisher of the embryo without difficulty! O one dedicated to vows! give birth to a long-living child, prolon-ger of the race". Then a woman with husband and sons living should give the wife Pañcagavya sanctified with the above-mentioned mantras.

It does not seem necessary that the wives who have established śrauta fires need observe the domestic New and Full Moon sacrifices separately,<sup>127</sup> because they agree closely in the deity and other details with those of the śrauta; the only difference is that offerings of peeps are substituted for cakes and no offerings to Indra or Mahendra are made. It is also distinctly clear that much importance cannot be attached to these rites as they have not been mentioned at all by a good many Gṛhya authorities like Bharadvāja, Laugākṣi (Kāṭhaka), Baudhāyana, Jaimini, and Sāṅkhāyana.

127 Cf. Baudh. GS., IV, 9, 1. p. 336.

On each New and Full Moon night they perform these sacrifices together with their husband. They are required so bathe and eat the fast-day food in the afternoon.<sup>130</sup> They prepare a Schālī-pāka from which the husband offers oblations to the various deities. Then they should, according to Pāraskara,<sup>131</sup> offer the Bali outside the house to the wife, the Man, Age, and the black-toothed white one, the Lord of bad women and those who, dwelling in the village or the forest, allure their offsprings. They then pray for welfare and offspring. They sleep that night on the ground; according to the Commentator on Gobhila,<sup>132</sup> they may sleep on the self-strewn grass (svastara), too. They together with the sacrificer are expected to, the Chief Wife must, pass that night with mutual entertainment recounting tales or other discourses. They commit nothing impure on that night. If the husband is on a journey, the chief wife acts as his substitute.<sup>133</sup>

In regard to the seasonal sacrifices, the Māṇ. GS.<sup>134</sup> says, in the event of the absence of the chief wife and the sacrificer even a Śūdrā wife is entitled to offer the morning and evening oblations to Serpents in course of the daily observance of the Śrāvaṇa sacrifice up till the Āgrahāyaṇeṣṭi. So there is no doubt that all other wives are entitled to offer the same in the event of failure of the chief wife. As all the women of the household are allowed to participate in the rite of alighting from the bedstead,<sup>135</sup> there is no doubt that all the wives join in it; they should, with their children on their lap or by their side, sit in accordance with seniority of the time of their marriage one after another next to the chief wife.

Now, so far as the purificatory (Aurdhvadehika) rites are concerned, the same rites are performed for each of them without any distinction whatsoever. If the pregnant wife dies, she should be, first of all, sprinkled with water mixed with cow's urine. When the dead body has been removed to the crematorium, the husband cuts open the child from the left side of her womb; if the child is still alive, he gives it the breast of its mother along with the prayer that the breast may be an exhaustless spring of plea-

He then tries to revert the opened womb to its normal position, at least, to make it look as though no operation has been made; anoints it with curd mixed with sacrificial clarified butter; and bathes her with water mixed with mud, ashes, Kuśa and cow's urine. She is now wrapped up in new clothes and cremated.<sup>137</sup> Keśavasvāmin in his Baudhāyana-paddhati<sup>138</sup> says that if the husband sees the child still alive, he should offer a sacrifice there with the prayer expressive of his pleasure to get the child alive, bathe it and carry it home; then, fourteen offerings are made and then she is cremated in accordance with the usual rites. The Karma-kāṇḍa-pradīpa<sup>139</sup> also quotes the opinion that herein the wife should be laid with her head towards the south, the left side of her belly measuring four fingers from the navel should be cut open. If the child be dead, it

Gadādhara in his Kāla-sāra,<sup>143</sup> thinks the cremation, either on the same day or after the passing away of the period of Impurity, is optional, i.e. it depends upon the intention of the chief mourner; preference, however, is given to cremation after the period of Impurity.<sup>144</sup> If she dies in a foreign country and as a consequence, the

the cake should be divided into as many portions as there are wives and each wife should be given a portion. According to the Prayoga-pārijāta, if six cakes have been offered in the Śrāddha and the sacrificer has two offered, each wife should be given one cake. If there are a good many wives, a selection should be made in accordance with qualities, age and period. Or, each of them may be given one cake at the end of each Śrāddha. According to the Mayūkha, the eating of the middle cake is only optional, and not indispensable. A wife who is sick, afflicted (with some mishap) or otherwise incapable,<sup>151</sup> should not eat the cake. According to Āpastamba, an ill-disposed or evil-hearted wife should also be avoided.<sup>152</sup> If the wives are not desirous of having children, they may not eat the cake.<sup>153</sup>

As the first wife and the husband raise up the fires and are really the protectors of them, the husband is not entitled to give up the fires on the death of any other wife than that of the first. In case of the death of the latter, an Āhitāgni is to cremate her with fire kindled from a new fire-drill or produced from the either half of a jar heated on the śrauta

Miserable indeed is the position of a Sūdrā wife from the religious point of view. From the beginning the Ārya-Sūdrā marriage seems to be a matter of accident<sup>156</sup> and sometimes, most probably, of expediency,<sup>157</sup> on the part of the husband and as such the Sūdrā wife seems to have deserved nothing more than a few privileges from an Aryan husband; at least she has no claims in religious matters.<sup>158</sup> It is definitely stated by Manu<sup>159</sup> that she can never be the first wife of an Aryan. Even though married, she simply serves to lead the family of the husband to degradation and the progeny to the status of Śūdras; a Brāhmaṇa is strictly forbidden either to cohabit with or have a child by her.<sup>160</sup> The sacrifices offered by her husband are not acceptable.<sup>161</sup> If he enters her bed immediately after taking a funeral feast, his forefathers will suffer from lying in her Impurities for a month.<sup>162</sup> The Pālāgalī cannot participate in any rite in the politico-religious ceremonies as she is a Śūdrā by birth.<sup>163</sup> A Śūdrā wife of one belonging to one of higher castes is not entitled to churn the fire.<sup>164</sup> The only instance where a Śūdrā wife is allowed to act as a substitute in a rite is the Śrāvaṇa sacrifice, where in the absence of the chief wife and the sacrificer and all other wives she may offer the daily oblation.

Several Sūtrakāras make provision for one Sūdrā wife of one belonging to the higher castes (e.g. Par. GS., i, 4, 10). Cf. Viśiṣṭha, 1, 25, and for his own view, the following Sūtras.

In spite of all these religious incapacities, the Sūdrā woman considers herself fortunate in having an Aryan husband; the Tait. Samh.<sup>166</sup> says in this case she does not care for wealth or prosperity.

It is sure that in religious matters, and therefore in secular matters too, a certain number of women were compelled to lose many rights. There is no doubt that polygamy to a certain extent leads to the deterioration in the position of women. This was, however, counterbalanced by polyandry which has been known in ancient, and in a lesser form in modern<sup>167</sup>, India.

There are reasons to believe that polyandry existed in ancient India. The ancient Seers would never have mentioned of a common wife of the Maruts and of the Aśvins if polyandry were unknown or discarded in the society.<sup>168</sup> The Ātharvavedic verses<sup>169</sup> saying that a woman even after having had ten former husbands, can still marry more, cannot but refer to polyandry. The case of Draupadī in the Mahābbārata is well-known; and the great epic asserts this much, that having many husbands is a desirable qualification for women.<sup>170</sup> In support of Draupadī's polyandrous marriage it cites the case of Jaṭilā Gautamī, Vārکشī, etc. Gautamī married seven Ṛṣis; Māriṣā married ten Havirdhānas<sup>171</sup> and her son Dakṣa is known as the son of ten fathers.<sup>172</sup> The former in their turn married Tārā in common.<sup>173</sup> Āpastamba<sup>174</sup> says a daughter is given to the family of her husband though it is, in his time, forbidden. He, most probably, refers to the Tait. saṃh.<sup>175</sup> which says that the daughter is given to the family. Bṛhaspati<sup>176</sup> also mentions that the delivery of a marriageable damsel to a family is found in other countries (than his own). The Purāṇas also know about it.<sup>177</sup>

the eldest wife, the polyandrous wife observes them with the eldest husband. The same reasons we have seen in the case of a polygamous husband in connection with the first wife would apply here, too. Draupadī had once to gaze at hell because she was more fond of Arjuna than her eldest husband Yudhiṣṭhira. Polyandry as well as Polygamy deprived a certain number of women as well as men of various religious rights. These twin usages seem to have counterbalanced the effects of each other on the society, and consequently, on the position of women as men and, at least, no emphasis can be laid on Polygamy as leading to deterioration in the position of women without any counteraction.

Just as the wife is enjoined to please the husband, the husband is also enjoined to please the wife.<sup>179</sup> Where the wife and the husband are whole-heartedly pleased with each other, they acquire the three objects of life (Tri-varga). They must remain satisfied with mutual partnership in all matters; they must not even think of others; for the violation of these rules they incur the same sin and undergo the same punishment without any distinction whatsoever.<sup>180</sup> For grave offences<sup>181</sup> they separate from each other or they may marry again. reasons.<sup>182</sup> She or he is to remarry, however, on the fullest knowledge that her or his marriage for the second time cannot be considered as a sacred ceremony (saṃskāra). Even though she or he remarries another unmarried man or woman, still the marriage cannot be accredited as a saṃskāra as each saṃskāra is to be observed only once in life and her or his marriage ceremony has been completed for ever in the first marriage.

From time immemorial<sup>183</sup> the wife has doubly blest her husband, by procreation as well as by participation in sacrifices. In this connection her epithets "Jāyā" and "Patnī"<sup>184</sup> are, no doubt to some extent, significant. But this "Jāyātva" and "Patnītva" are by no means separable in a clear-cut way as her Jāyātva serves really for her Patnītva. She performs a religious duty by means of procreation. She as well as her husband have been born as owing debts to the gods, to the Ṛṣis, to the fathers and to man.<sup>185</sup> In order to liberate themselves from the debt to fathers, they are to marry and have children;] the fathers in the other world depend for their continuance on the offerings of their children.<sup>186</sup> The ardent desire for having children for religious purposes has given women an extremely high position.<sup>187</sup> So it is only natural that she almost always prays to gods for children.<sup>188</sup> Owing to the urgent necessity of having children, productive unions are always to be effected in rituals so much so that even the vessels, spoons or other sacrificial implements are often imagined as males and females. Progeny is one of the primary objects of performing sacrifices. The wife as the bearer of this highest blessing on earth deserves respect from the husband as well as from the society. The husband is bound to respect her as in her, the Jāyā, he is born again, and as she, offered as great Brilliance to him by the gods and the seers, is his mother again.<sup>189</sup>

According to Cook, Greek women are excluded from the cult of Theos Megus, Zeus and Tachnepsis,<sup>190</sup> from Mithraic rites,<sup>191</sup> and the race of Drypole;<sup>192</sup> but there is not a single Vedic ritual from which they are excluded. In the Pravargya sacrifice the wife wraps up her head. This does not mean exclusion at all; on the other hand, it is a part of her ritualistic observances in the sacrifice, as, after this observance, she joins in other rites in the sacrifice. According to a few authorities<sup>193</sup> the wife should be debarred from the Sapiṇḍana if she has neither husband nor sons. Mārkaṇḍeya<sup>194</sup> thinks even though her husband may be living, unless she has any issue she is not entitled to have the Sapiṇḍana, Hemādri<sup>195</sup> thinks the mention of the son is significant of the husband and so there is no contradiction in statements of these authorities. But there is no doubt that these authorities are opposed to equally outstanding authorities. The Ṣaṭ-triṃśat-smṛti<sup>196</sup> as interpreted by Kṛṣṇamiśra is in support of the Sapiṇḍikaraṇa being held even though the wife may be a widow as well as sonless. The Dharma-pradīpa,<sup>197</sup> too, as quoted by the same authority holds the same view.

Even though the authority of the first school be followed, there is no reason to think that it would be prejudicial to the high position of the wife. Under similar circumstances the limitations are the same for the wife as for the husband. If the husband is a widower and sonless, the Sapiṇḍana may be performed for him by his brothers' sons; otherwise it is wholly omitted. In the same circumstances the Sapiṇḍana for the wife, too, may be performed by the sons of her co-wives, otherwise the omission is as inevitable as in the case of the husband. Moreover, the object of the Sapiṇḍana is to relieve the man from the state of a man; such a state of the wife in the above circumstances will cease because of the performance of other Śrāddhas.

The stress laid by the authorities on the ritualistic impurity of women during their monthly course, pregnancy and childbirth is due to their physical incapacity or some other unavoidable cause or causes. which she should follow at that time<sup>205</sup> and declare that she must not be tempted to observe any rite as it is sure to make her undergo some painstaking observance at least. Even though she may not be bodily present therein, several rites, viz., the New and Full Moon Sacrifices, the Piṇḍa-pitṛ-yajña, the daily oblations, etc., are allowed to be performed. These are allowed, simply because they would otherwise cause some hindrance, necessitate some atonement owing to the lapse of the proper time. The performance of the optional sacrifices, the Paśuyāga, the Soma sacrifice, etc., is barred in her absence. Sacrifice continues, but in spite of her absence, she gets the benefit of its performance. Kātyāyana, however, mentions that if she becomes impure during the Soma Sacrifice, she should continue wearing her Dīkṣā-garments, stay in sand during the emission, and should, finally, take her baths before the Altar during the morning and evening with water mixed with cow's urine of the Chief Wife) and the Śrāddha should be performed on the expiry of the period of her menstruation. It is, however, sanctioned that only the Annual Śrāddha should be performed with cooked rice (which, it seems, should be cooked by the sacrificer himself) even in this case.<sup>209</sup> The Samśkāramayūkha quotes Vṛddhagārgya to show that the Vṛddhiśrāddha may be performed during her monthly illness.<sup>210</sup> The above rules hold good if the wife is observing Garbhāśauca (impurity for pregnancy).<sup>211</sup>

If the sacrifices are performed in her absence, the husband atones on the fourth night (after she has taken her purificatory bath). side, and offer various oblations to Him. She thus firmly establishes her connection with her Agni.

She also sees that the wives of gods are worshipped before the sacrifice is finished. The wives of the gods worshipped before are invoked herein to have equal share of oblations with their husbands. The sacrifice cannot be ended without the satisfaction of the wives and their human counterpart. After the Patnī-samyāja she once again partakes of the Idā; the Samyu-vāc is recited and Samśrava oblation is offered. She concludes the sacrifice by having uttered the greetings to the priests and bidding good-bye to them.

Thus we see that in Vedic ritual the wife holds as important a position as the husband. As equal halves they perform the sacrifices with equal results. If the husband has many wives, the chief wife is, really speaking, the patnī in the strict sense of the term; she has many rights, in fact, all the important rights in rituals in precedence over her co-wives. Other wives (excepting Śūdrās) also join in the sacrifices and perform certain rites; anyway, they are not non-entities in religious matters so far as their personal earthly benefit is concerned. But the Śūdrā wife of an Āryan has no right in rituals whatsoever. Polyandry and polygamy as existing side by side in the country in varying degrees have counterbalanced each other. Both of them are, however, abnormalities as monogamy is always the ideal of the society. The Vedic ritual imposes upon the widow as well as the widower equally formidable difficulties: the same are the problems for both; they are to decide which course would be the best for them. Even in the lifetime of both, they are allowed, in extreme cases, to remarry,—however, on the full knowledge that such marriages cannot be recognised as saṃskāras. The Vedic ritual nowhere gives any such evidence as to lead to the assumption that the wife is to be considered inferior in position to the husband: ritualistic injunctions on her in connection with her impurities are reasonable pieces of advice and cannot suggest any the least inferiority in her position. The ritual literature is full of praise for the wife, for her virtues, and it is no wonder that the concluding oblations are offered to satisfy her most revered and beloved God Agni and the Wives of the gods, and that she concludes the sacrifice with final greetings. Every Vedic sacrifice begins with the worship of the mother (Mātṛkā-pūjā), culminates in the worship of the wife (Patnī-saṃyāja) and successfully ends with the worship of the Daughter (Kumārī-pūjā) just in the same way as the sacrifice of man's life (Jīvanayajña) begins with the worship of the Mother, culminates in the worship of the Wife (Śakti-pūjā; Patnī-pūjā) and ends with the worship of the Daughter.<sup>236</sup>

The Widow In The Vedic Ritual.***

CHAPTER I

In Vedic Ritual the position of a widow is no more miserable than that of a widower. In the absence of the equal half, the other half becomes useless—in religious matters as well as in worldly affairs—and what the surviving half can best do is to pass away the remaining part of his or her life in absolute self-abnegation, proving loyal to the deceased one and offering homage to him or her in thought as well as in action. If they cannot observe this ideal, they can do what they consider best; the way is no more blocked for one than for the other. On the other hand, the widow has some special privileges over the widower as will shown below.

NIYOGA

The propagation of children is enjoined as a religious necessity because they keep the ancestors living in the other world. On this score the widower sometimes marries again. The widow, too, can remarry if she likes; but if she prefers to keep up the memory of her husband and live with her husband's family and at the same time have children, she may have them by having recourse to Niyoga, or levirate.<sup>3</sup> Niyoga is a social custom allowing widow or even women with husbands living to have children by persons other than their husbands. It has been known in India from Rig-Vedic times.<sup>2</sup> Whereas the commentators try to interpret Āpastamba<sup>3</sup> and Baudhāyana's<sup>4</sup> sūtras in support of Niyoga, there is no doubt that Manu<sup>5</sup> contradicts himself on the point as pointed out by Br̥haspati.<sup>6</sup> Vasiṣṭha,<sup>7</sup> Gautama<sup>8</sup> and Nārada,<sup>9</sup> however, speak approvingly on the usage. Kauṭilya allows a queen to resort to Niyoga if an old king is badly in need of a competent and honest heir.<sup>9</sup> Yaśodhara also in his commentary on Vātsyāyana<sup>10</sup> mentions that a brother-in-law often becomes the lover of the eldest sister-in-law; this also seems to refer to Niyoga.

The Niyoga is nothing but making virtue of a necessity and after conception, she must not meet again the person appointed for Niyoga.<sup>11</sup> She can appoint for Niyoga her husband's younger brother, some kinsman or near relative of his or even an outsider during the life-time of her husband with his consent if he is incapable of procreating or after his death, if she is childless.<sup>12</sup> She may also do the same if the husband be away from home for some years, and for some reason or other, she does not like to leave her husband's family and remarry. As is only natural in ancient societies, the younger brother of the husband is preferred for the purpose as the issue, in that case, carries the maximum quantity of blood of the family of the husband possible under the circumstances.

10 Vātsyāyana, chap. 23. p. 262, 1, 8, "Jyeṣṭhabhāryā bahu-devarakā" commentary, op. cit., p. 263, 1, 7-8 Nirṇaya-sāgara ed. 1891).

11 Nārada-dharma-sūtra, ii. 1. 20; ii. 2.

12 According to Gautama (xxviii. 45), issues raised are to be treated as sons of a śūdra wife by a Brāhmaṇa, cp. Viṣṇu-smṛti, xv. 37.

For a list of persons to be preferred, see Vaśiṣṭha-dharma-sūtra, xvii. 79. For instances of Niyoga, see Mahābhārata i, 103, 104.

A wife or a widow must not, however, be forced to have recourse to Niyoga<sup>13</sup> for inheritance or similar purposes.

Baudhāyana<sup>14</sup> and Vāśiṣṭha<sup>15</sup> say that a widow desiring Niyoga should avoid meat, honey etc. and sleep on the ground for a short period not exceeding one year. After six months of the death of her husband, she offers a funeral oblation to her husband and with the approval and aid of her brother or father, and relatives of her husband, and also in consultation with the Gurus of her family, she chooses the man to have an issue by her.<sup>16</sup> A characterless, mad, diseased or very aged widow is not entitled to Niyoga.<sup>17</sup> Sixteen years after maturity is the proper time for Niyoga.<sup>18</sup> A sickly person is to be avoided for the purpose.<sup>19</sup> She must be economically independent of the person whom she appoints for Niyoga and provide for the necessary expenses for food, unguents, etc. herself i.e. from the estate of her husband.<sup>20</sup> An issue by Niyoga i.e. a kṣetraja<sup>21</sup> son is second in position only to the real son, being decidedly better than an adopted son. In the list of inheritors, his position is second to that of the aurasa or real son begotten by the husband himself.<sup>22</sup> An adopted son or daughter coming as he or she does from outside cannot claim precedence over the Niyoga-son who has the blood of the family in him.

Thus we find that the Niyoga is sanctioned under the following circumstances:

1. When the wife (with her husband living) or widow is childless.
2. When the wife has children, but they are not honest and competent. This is a special concession granted only to a queen, with her husband incapable of any further procreation, for in this case a competent heir is absolutely necessary for the good of the whole country.
3. But when a wife or a widow has already a good and competent child or children, Niyoga is not allowed under any circumstances.

Further the Niyoga always needs the approval of her husband if living or of her father or brother and husband's families, and then alone the children begotten can be regarded as legitimate, enjoying all the social and legal privileges of those born in wedlock. Otherwise they are considered illegitimate. This strong emphasis on the approval of the husband, the heads of families and Gurus clearly shows that there is nothing underhand in this practice of the Niyoga, but it is a full-fledged social custom, approved, at least consented to, as necessary under certain circumstances. In course of time when Niyoga became unpopular in India the number of children to be raised by this device was lowered down to two, or even one.<sup>23</sup> But the Mahābhārata expressly states that the number should be three and no more,<sup>24</sup> though in still earlier times, it points out, a larger number of children could be thus raised. Thus Vyūṣitāśva's wife Bhadrā is said to have obtained seven sons.<sup>25</sup> Bālirāja had eleven sons; Kākṣivat and others had one maid<sup>26</sup> and five 23 Manu, ix, 61: Baudhāyana-dharma-sūtra, xviii. 8—not more than two sons. Haradatta, however, explains the word as “not more than one son”. Saudāsa appointed Vaśiṣṭha to have one son (Aśmaka) by his wife Madayanti.

Kunti's sister Śrutasenā had also three sons by means of Niyoga. Saradandayini also did the same, one of them being Durjaya; i. 120, 38-40, p. 212 Citrasala Press ed.

25 Mahābhārata, i. 121, vv. 19ff, Citrasala Press, p. 213.

sons by his queen Sudeṣṇā<sup>27</sup>. The Mahābhārata also makes the significant remark that further similar instances were not lacking.<sup>28</sup> Thus we see that whereas the widowers have three alternatives to choose from, viz., 1. the ideal one i.e. cherishing the memory of the departed wife, leading a celibate life; 2 remarrying for the sake of children i.e., for the sake of propitiating the forefathers; and 3. remarrying in spite of having children by the first wife, the widow is entitled to all these; in addition, she has another privilege, viz., having recourse to Niyoga. This is specially allowed in the case of the widow because her circumstances are different from those of the widower; she may desire to stay in her husband's family. If she, however, remarries outside her family, she has to leave her former husband's house. So a middle course was devised specially for her, viz. staying in her husband's family and having children by Niyoga. This proves that women were shown every possible consideration in Ancient India though it cannot be denied that this attitude unfortunately changed for the worse in later ages.

Widow-marriage in ancient India.***

If the widow considers life-long celibacy or the Niyoga<sup>1</sup> unsuitable and she must have a second husband, she is entitled to remarry. The following evidences may be adduced in support of the above contention: The R̥g-vedic verse X.18.8<sup>2</sup>, ‘Rise, O’ woman, come towards the world of the living; thou liest by the side of this one whose life is gone. Be the full-fledged wife of (this) your husband who (now) grasps your hand and woos you’ refers to widow-marriage. Hillebrandt’s theory<sup>3</sup> that this verse does not apply to the funeral ceremony at all is not tenable. He thinks the verse was used for summoning the queen to remove herself from the side of the dead and for no other purpose at all.<sup>4</sup> He formulates his theory on the evidence of the Śāṅkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra<sup>5</sup> according to which this verse is the first of the Utthāpinī verses that are employed for raising the queen. But he ignores totally the fact that the verse appears even in the Atharva-veda<sup>6</sup> and the Taittirīya Aranyaka,<sup>7</sup> not to speak of the Gṛhya-sūtras<sup>8</sup> of the same standing as that of Śāṅkhāyana, as one of the mantras used during the funeral ceremony. There is no reason why the verse referring to the married woman, who is addressed as the wife of the person grasping her hand with a view to marrying her should be employed only during the Puruṣa-medha and not during the funeral ceremony. Again, the remaining Utthāpinī verses mentioned in the Śāṅkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra (16.13.13) do not seem to have any specific connection with the Puruṣa-medha sacrifice. The well-known R̥g-vedic verses X. 85. 21-22, which refer to Gandharva Viśvāvasu, appears throughout the Vedic literature, as marriage mantras. RV.X.53.8. has been included in the list of the Utthāpinī verses simply because it begins as Ut tiṣṭhata. It seems that the four Utthāpinī verses have been so called in the Śāṅkhāyana-śrauta-sūtra, simply because all the four verses begin with Ut or Uta. Hillebrandt emphasises that A.V.XVIII, 3.1-4. can only be taken in connection with the Puruṣa-medha sacrifice. But Śāṅkhāyana himself on whose authority he has to base his arguments, takes only the second verse in connection with it. In explaining these verses he thinks Jīva-loka, in the first verse means Pati-loka, Gopati pati and so on. These are certainly forced interpretations. There is no doubt that the verse is used in connection with the funeral ceremony; but the real difficulty lies in deciding about the true interpretation of the verse. Sāyaṇa himself gives different interpretations in different places. In interpreting the verse (RV.X.18.8.) which occurs in the Atharva-veda (XVIII.3.2.), as well, Sāyaṇa interprets its second line with reference to the first husband while he explains the same verse in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (VI.1) with reference to the second husband. Sāyaṇa interprets "Abhi sam babhūtha" as "Ābhimukhyena samyak prāpnuhi", taking Bhū in the sense of "getting"<sup>9</sup> with the aid of Pāṇini's rule Chandasi Luṅlaṅliṭaḥ.<sup>10</sup> Modern authorities have likewise differed in opinion. Among those who think the

According to these latter authorities, therefore, the verse sanctions widow-marriage. Some of the medieval authorities<sup>20</sup> have, no doubt, employed the verse as the prescribed mantra for the widow-burning in which case it can by no means refer to the second husband, but a reasonable doubt gains ground in view of the fact that none of the ancient authorities employ it for the same purpose. According to the former "Ud īrṣva" refers to the raising up of the wife on the funeral pyre and the "Jīva-loka" then, according to them, must mean some part in heaven. But this idea is a later development and represents a very small section of the Smārtas who sanctioned widow-burning. All the ancient authorities unanimously prescribed the verse as a mantra for removing the wife from the funeral pyre wherein she lies by the side of her dead husband, strictly in accordance with the direction found in the first line of the same. Āśvalāyana employs it as a mantra with which the younger brother of the deceased husband (or some such person), a disciple or an old servant should raise the widow from the funeral pyre.<sup>21</sup> Nārāyaṇa<sup>22</sup> and Haradatta<sup>23</sup> commenting upon the sūtra of Āśvalāyana say that the younger brother of her husband only is entitled to be her second husband. According to Baudhāyana,<sup>24</sup> Āpastamba<sup>25</sup> and Hiranyakeśin<sup>26</sup> a Patistha (one who is entitled to marry her, i.e., the younger brother of her husband or Patihita or a kinsman of her husband) should utter this mantra while raising up the widow by her left hand. This Patistha or Patihita is recommended to raise her up so that she may be his wife if she intends to remarry or be maintained by him if she decides to have recourse to Niyoga. Thus none but Āśvalāyana refers to an old servant or a disciple as a fit person for raising the widow up from the funeral pyre. This old servant or disciple is really a substitute for the Devara who may be absent for some reason or other. So the Devara or the husband's younger brother is the fittest person to remarry the widow.

This is further supported by the etymological meaning of the word "Devara" (द्वितीयः पतिः) (Dvitiyaḥ varah) (husband's young-Kauṭilya points out that she may, no doubt, remarry but if she does not marry the person selected by her father-in-law, she will forfeit the right of possessing any longer the dowry received during her former marriage or other gifts from the father-in-law or husband.<sup>28</sup> The Mahābhārata also expressly states that <sup>29</sup> a woman marries her brother-in-law after the death of her husband. In later times Samudragupta's son Candragupta II is said to have married his elder brother Rāmagupta's widow Dhruvadevī.<sup>29a</sup> Thus it is evident that this custom of remarrying the husband's younger brother continued for a long time even after the Vedic period.

Though remarriage with the husband's younger brother was preferred, it was by no means compulsory. The passages referring to widow-marriage in the Atharva-veda, etc., do not refer to it at all; as a matter of fact, it not only does not question the validity of the eleventh

The words Didhiṣu, Didhiṣupati,<sup>34</sup> Parapūrvā, Paunarbhava, etc. do not necessarily refer to the younger brother of the dead husband, though they undoubtedly show the prevalence of widow-marriage in ancient India. The great philanthropist Paṇḍita Īśvaracandra Vidyāsāgara, while attempting to legalise widow-marriage in Hindu Society in 1856 based his evidence upon a few Smṛti works and the Mahābhārata, but the evidences adduced above clearly show that the widow-marriage is supported not only by the Smṛtis but also by the Vedic literature. A widow is allowed to marry as many times as she likes, either the younger brother of her husband or somebody else.

Regarding the legal position of the son of a widow, Gautama<sup>46</sup> allows one-fourth share of his father's property to the son of a widow by her second husband. Vasiṣṭha<sup>47</sup> and Viṣṇu<sup>48</sup> declare the son of a married widow fourth in the list of inheritors in order of preference and better than an adopted son. Manu<sup>49</sup> says that a Paunarbhava, son of a remarried widow, is to be regarded as a Brahman living by trade. ones seems to be a later development. However, the Vedic literature is silent about it.<sup>50</sup>

Thus we have shown above that widow-marriage was neither prohibited nor highly recommended in Ancient India.<sup>51</sup> The ideal was a life of celibacy after the demise of the partner in life, failing which a widow might either take recourse to Niyoga or remarriage.

50 From the Mahābhārata it appears that widow-marriage began to fall into disrepute in its time though it was even then, probably, widely in vogue. In the Ādi-Parvan (104), Dīrghatamas is said to have decreed that a woman must not marry a second time.

CHAPTER III

Widow-burning in Ancient India

When in course of time the Indian society did not approve the rites of Niyoga and Widow-marriage,* widows became victims of a cruel intrigue against them, viz., the Suttee or widow-burning. The right of Sahamaraṇa or dying with the husband on the same funeral pyre is certainly not Vedic.<sup>1</sup>

Colebroke in 1795 stated that the Ṛg-vedic verse, X. 18. 7 is "the only Vedic authority for the rite of Sati".<sup>2</sup> But this view is not tenable for two reasons. Firstly, the reading that he accepts cannot be traced. He somewhat followed Raghunandana's reading as is found in the Serampore edition of his works. Then Raghunandana enjoined widow-burning (Sahamaraṇa or Anumaraṇa).

* For these, see Modern Review, November, 1941, pp. 472-473 and January, 1942 pp. 68-71.

1 Some later Smṛtikāras recognise also the Anumaraṇa, i.e. the death of a widow after some time as prescribed, though not on the same pyre, in the fire lighted up with the fire preserved from the funeral pyre of the husband. Pregnant widows in an impure state cannot immolate themselves.

on the basis of a wholly wrong Vedic text which runs as follows:—

इमा नारीरविधवाः सुपत्नीराजनेन सर्पिषाऽभिसंविशन्तु ।

अनश्रवोऽनमीवाः सुरत्नाः प्रविशन्तु जनयो योनिमग्नेः ॥

Colebrooke probably got the reading from some Bengali pandita of his own time who knew evidently Raghunandana's reading of the last few words as given here.<sup>3</sup> As the reading followed by Colebrooke cannot be traced anywhere, it is to be rejected altogether. The right reading is:—प्रविशन्तु जनयो योनिमग्नेः ॥<sup>4</sup>

The translations of the verse by Wilson<sup>5</sup> and Max Müller<sup>6</sup> is not satisfactory. The Verse should be translated as follows :—

“Let these women, not widowed, having good husbands, dress their eyes with butter serving as eye-salve; without tears, without disease, well-ornamented, let these wives enter the house first.”

3 Candēśvara about 1400 A.D., quoted the verse as the authority for widow-burning. Candēśvara cites a corresponding verse from the Brahma-purāṇa as well. So about 1400 A.D. this verse of some Khila Sūkta not now-a-days known beginning as such appears to have passed as an authority for widow-burning.

4 Prof. Wilson's reading, JRAS., vol. XVI, p. 205, सुरत्ना रोहन्तु जनयो योनिमग्ने । Dr. Max Müller accepts this regarding, only, correcting Suratnā-rohantu as Suratnā ārohanantu.

6 Max Müller (Essays, Leipzig, 1869, II, p. 31f) who once

In any case, it cannot have any reference to widow-burning whatsoever.

Secondly, Colebrooke takes it for granted that it is an appropriate mantra uttered during the funeral ceremony. But it is quite otherwise. The ancient authorities on Vedic rites such as Āśvalāyana,<sup>7</sup> the Bṛhad-devatā,<sup>8</sup> the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka,<sup>9</sup> Baudhāyana<sup>10</sup> and Bharadvāja,<sup>11</sup> thought the verse to be "eine Ansprache an die ubrigen Frauen, die dem Leichenbegangnis beiwohnen und ol und Butter auf Holzstoss zu giessen haben" translated it as :

"Lasst diese Frauen, die keine Witwen sind, sonder gute Manner haben, sich mit ol und Butter nahern. Die welche Mutter sind lasst zuerst zum Altar hinauf schreiten ohne Tranen, ohne Kummer, sonder geschmuckt mit schonen Edelgestein" again translated it as follows in ZDMG., Band IX, p. XXV :—"Es treten ein die Frau'n mit ol und Butter, nicht Witwen sie, nein, stolzauf edle Manner. Die Mutter gehn zuerst hinauf zur statte, in schonen schmuck und ohne Leid und Tranen."

7 Grhya-sūtra, IV, 6, 8, The commentators Gārgya Nārāyaṇa and Hardatta Ācārya differ as to the manner of salving the eyes. However, the women are to salve their eyes with bundles of Kuśa stalks and then throw them to their back and then the chief mourners look at them with this verse.

prescribed it as a mantra to be used during the Sānti-karman which is performed on the tenth day after death. When the relatives of the deceased assemble in the burning ground for the Sānti-karman i. e., the rite for the well-being of the living, a fire is lighted up and all sit down on a bullock-hide.

The chief mourner then offers four oblations to the fire with a spoon made of varuṇa wood. All the relatives then rise up and recite a mantra. The women are then requested to put on collyrium and the chief mourner looks at them while uttering this verse,

In the Atharva-veda too, the verse appears twice (XII.2.2. XVIII.3.57). AV. XII.2,3 appears among verses meant for Sānti, i. e. the appeasing of Agni Kravyāt and for the consecration of the new house-fire. According to the Kauśika-sūtra 72. 11, the verse is used for the preparation of the new domestic fire wherein the women are presented with grass-shoots dipped in butter. Thus it is the same rite as Sānti Karman. A.V. XVIII. 3. 57 is used in connection with ancestral rites. The Kauśika does not mention its specific ritualistic application. Following the other schools, the verse is to be taken as a mantra of the Sānti rite.<sup>12</sup>

12 It is interesting that the Paippalāda recension adds another corresponding verse for the use of men.

As the various Vedic schools mentioned above to which more may be added, all prescribe the verse as an appropriate mantra for the Śānti-karman which is performed ten days after the funeral ceremony, Colebrooke's contention that this verse applies to the funeral ceremony is thus utterly baseless, Rājā Rādhākānta unhesitatingly declares that the Ṛg-vedic verse X. 18. 8 refers to the Suttee.<sup>13</sup> He says when a Satī lies on the pyre, she intimates her resolution to immolate herself. She is then requested with this verse to come back to the world of the living, but she shows her valour by refusing the requests of her kinsmen. Rādhākānta cites in his support the fact that even at the latest phase of the Satī, the widow is requested by her friends and relatives to live.<sup>14</sup> If even then she remains firm in her determination, she is burnt to death. But this view is not tenable.

The first half of the Ṛg-vedic verse, X.18.8 represents, probably, a relic of widow-burning that was known in the Indo-European period;<sup>15</sup> but nevertheless it shows that widow-burning was at the period of the composition of this R̥g-verse forbidden. A similar relic is also traced in the Atharva-veda (18.3.3)<sup>16</sup> which refers to some rescue of a young wife from self-immolation. In fact, this symbolical burning is self-evident from the ritualistic application of the verse itself. Thus, Baudhāyana says that the wife should lie down on the left side of the corpse. Āśvalāyana recommends that she should be placed near the head of the corpse on the north side. But it must be a matter of ritualistic observance pure and simple as irrespective of the RV.X.18.8 we see that in a subsequent mantra<sup>17</sup> the widow of a Brāhmaṇa is asked to carry in her hand a bit of gold, the widow of a Kṣatriya the bow and the wife of a Vaiśya the jewel which is offered along with the corpse of a Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya or Vaiśya respectively.<sup>18</sup>

17 Taittirīya Āraṇyaka VI, 1.

18 The opinion of one of the scholiasts of Āśvalāyana (IV, 2, 17-18) slightly varies here.

The Atharva-veda<sup>19</sup> clearly shows that the wife comes back to a life of prosperity and bliss with children. The Rig-vidhāna says<sup>20</sup> a brother-in-law (Devara) should dissuade his sister-in-law from ascending the funeral pyre of the dead husband. The A-recension of the Bṛhad-devatā shows that this is the verse uttering which the younger brother of the husband dissuades the widow lying on the funeral pyre by the side of the deceased husband from burning herself to death.<sup>21</sup>

Thus it is clear that all the Sūtra Texts and other Vedic works prescribe that the wife should lie down by the side of her husband and she is to be raised up and is to return to the world of the living.<sup>22</sup> This verse can therefore by no means refer to Widow-burning.

Again, the silence of the entire Sūtra Literature, Buddhist Literature, Megasthenes, Kauṭilya and early

19 XVIII, 2, 1.

21 VII, 13-15. The B-recension, however, seems to have been tampered with; or probably, it simply notices a later development; it says that the widow-burning is optional in the case of other castes than the Brāhmaṇa. The burning of Brāhmaṇa widows is, however, a heinous crime.

22 Only the later popular works such as the Paddhatis and Prayogas mention that "the raising up of the wife" (Utthāpana) is applicable to those cases only where the wives are not willing to immolate themselves.

Smārtas such as Manu and Yājñavalkya confirm that this abominable custom was not in vogue in India even in their times.

There is ample proof to show that even in later times when widow-burning became a religious practice in some parts of the country, well-known Smārtas as well as literary giants denounced it as strongly as possible. Thus, Medhātithi in his commentary on Manu vehemently protests against the custom and considers it wholly opposed to the Vedas.<sup>23</sup> Virāṭ as quoted by Aparārka on Yājñavalkya 1-87<sup>24</sup> also holds the same view emphasising that the Suttee is simply committing suicide for nothing; it means totally ignoring wifely duties for which a Suttee is liable to religious penalties. Bāṇabhaṭṭa opposed the custom tooth and nail.<sup>25</sup>

It is thus proved conclusively that widow-burning is not Vedic. It is not Tantrika either.

The Tantras hold a very important position from the point of religious practice in particular. They as a rule denounce the Suttee or Saha-maraṇa rite. Thus the Mahānirvāṇa-tantra<sup>26</sup> declares the Suttee a criminal; by following the husband on the funeral pyre, she herself paves her way to hell.

26 X. 80.

Thus the rite of Saha-maraṇa is neither Vedic nor Tantric. It is at best Paurāṇic.

In the Mahābhārata, there is a single solid instance of widow-burning,<sup>27</sup> viz., that of Mādri. But it is clear that her self-immolation was not at all prompted by religious considerations, for paving the way of the husband and his ancestors to heaven but on personal considerations pure and simple.<sup>28</sup> All the sages present tried to dissuade her from this ignoble act. Again in the original portion of the Rāmāyaṇa viz. Books II-IV, there is no reference to the Suttee rite. The instance of Vedavati's mother in the Uttara-kāṇḍa (17.14) refers to a much later date. The burning of the widow as a religious rite did not develop certainly in the epic age about 5th century B.C.

Presumably this rite came in to existence about the beginning of the Christian era or soon after. In the fourth century A.D. in Kālidāsa's Kumāra-saṃbhava (Canto IV) Rati is depicted as ready to follow Madana on the funeral pyre. The incident in the last act of Śūdraka's Mṛcchakaṭika also represents this age. Subsequently a few centuries later this abominable custom is shown as receiving the support of some law-givers such as Aṅgiras,<sup>29</sup>

Vṛddhahārīta,<sup>30</sup> etc.<sup>31</sup> By the fourteenth century A. D. attempts seem to have been made even to adulterate the ancient texts such as the Mahābhārata and the Parāśara-smṛti. The verses “Avamatya tu yāḥ” and “Bhartranumarāṇa-kāle” etc., attributed by Mādhava in his Parāśara-Mādhaviya on Parāśara-smṛti<sup>32</sup> are not traceable in the Mahābhārata. Verses IV, 31-32 of the Parāśara-smṛti which advocate widow-burning somewhat contradict the last but one verse (IV-29).

Raghunandana managed to find out even Vedic sanction for this custom as we have shown before. Instances of Suttee of this and subsequent times may be heaped up from various sources.<sup>33</sup>

It seems that for some reason or other widow-burning was resorted to by Kṣatriya-women, particularly for getting rid of the oppression of the invaders.

For an account of the latest phase of the Suttee, the travelling accounts of Foreigners in India are instructive and interesting, though at times exaggerated,

It is significant in connection with the spread of this custom that some invaders such as the Hūṇas and the Scythians considered widow-burning as religious. Scythian rule in Northern India must have helped the spread of the Satī rite there. The example of the rulers in particular is bound to be followed at times by the people at large. The other reason seems to be that some widows, at the moment of their deepest grief, could not think they would be able to live without their husbands and had recourse to self-immolation. Their example, considered as noble, was also sometimes followed. By and by the Saha-maraṇa rite gained popularity and public approbation and subsequently, religious sanction in some parts of the country.

Thus neither the Vedas nor the Tantras sanction the Saha-maraṇa rite. The ceremonial procedure of the rite has, however, been detailed in the Purāṇas such as the Padma-purāṇa.<sup>34</sup> As such, the Saha-maraṇa may be called only Pauranic.

CHAPTER IV

The Widow In The Vedic Ritual.*

Miscellaneous rites

As the Sahamarāṇa rite is not at all Vedic, it cannot affect the position of the widow from the point of view of Vedic ritual. But it is of interest to note that even in later times widow-burning is sanctioned as an alternative course to be followed by those who are afraid of widowhood. Preference is always given to Brahmācārya<sup>1</sup>. Manu is absolutely silent about widow-burning and recommends Brahmācārya as the highest duty of widow<sup>2</sup>. Viṣṇu, mentioning the Brahmācārya before Anvārohaṇa, shows that he prefers the former to the later<sup>3</sup>. The Agni-purāṇa also upholds the same view<sup>4</sup>. Devaṇṇabhaṭṭa in the Vyavahāra-kāṇḍa of his Smṛti-candrikā specifically points out that a life of celibacy is certainly preferable<sup>5</sup>. The religious injunction that Brahmin widows should not immolate themselves shows that widow-burning is not commendable except under special circumstances<sup>6</sup>. 'Leading a celibate life is thus the highest Dharma for the widower as well as the widow. Just as the wife is considered Vidhavā after her husband's death, the widower is also considered Vidhava<sup>7</sup> (really, without a wife) after the death of his wife if he has no sons of Hārīta, Gautama, Angiras, and Vyāsa recommended Sahamarāṇa for all widows except Brāhmaṇis. In much later times, however, the rule became somewhat relaxed; see Aparārka on Yājñavalkya, I. 87; Mādhava on Parāśara, IV. 31; etc.

excellent behaviour, versed in the Śruti, etc.<sup>8</sup> The lot of a widower is as unfortunate as that of widow; it is the losing of the equal half of life that renders either of them equally unfit for religious observances unless otherwise authorised. Just like a widow, a widower, too, is debarred from all religious affairs.<sup>9</sup> A widower is not entitled to be entertained in the Śrāddha ceremony, just as the widow is not entitled to cook food for ancestors during the Śrāddha.<sup>10</sup>

In the Vedic ritual the rights of the widower and the widow are perfectly counterbalanced. The surviving half performs the funeral and Śrāddha ceremonies for the departed half, provided the two have no children.<sup>11</sup> In case of too, she worships the ancestors of both sides.<sup>15</sup> Just as in the case of the widower, all the male ancestors are worshipped along with their departed wives, if any of the ancestors has one half still surviving, she does not reckon the other half as a man but worships the immediately preceding three as men along with their deceased wives. The ritualistic procedure or Prayoga that she follows is exactly the same as that of the widower.<sup>16</sup> She is not debarred even from performing the Vṛddhi Śrāddha<sup>17</sup> which very few persons are entitled to perform. Thus while performing a Śrāddha, she uses an upper garment as the third sacred thread hanging over her right shoulder, and she herself performs all rites pertaining to the Sāṃvatsarika or other Śrāddhas.<sup>18</sup> In an Ekoddiṣṭa Śrāddha, she performs all the rites up to the Saṃkalpa and may then permit a priest to complete the rest on her behalf.<sup>19</sup> Of course she may herself perform the whole ceremony if she likes. If she permits a Brahmin to perform it, she alternately puts on the sacred thread on her left or right shoulder just as the priest does<sup>20</sup>. In the ritual literature nowhere is there any suggestion to debar her from performing any rite that a widower may perform.

During the lifetime of the husband, the wife is not required to fast nor is she entitled to observe any rite in her own exclusive right, just as the husband also cannot do so in his own. But after the death of either of them they perform several rites as mentioned above, apparently separately, but really the rites are performed for the acquirement of religious merit by them both, and neither of them is entitled in this lifetime or after the death of either to perform any rite for individual good. In her lifetime as well as after her death the wife is the only religious partner of the husband. The widower cannot disgrace his deceased wife in any way; on the other hand, her memory is to be cherished throughout the rest of his life in all religious matters.

The above principle is also upheld by the Purāṇas,

19 कंचिद् ब्राह्मणमृत्विक्त्वेन परिकल्प्य तं ब्रूयात् ममाज्ञया त्वमिद-ममुकध्नाद्धाख्यं कर्म कुर्विति ।

according to which, after the death of either the husband or the wife, he or she should, apart from observing the rites mentioned above, also observe the Trirātri-vrata, the vows for gifts, sacred bath, etc., the Ekādaśī-vrata, Dvādaśī-vrata as well as the Trayodaśī-vrata<sup>21</sup> for their common good.

Such stringent rules as are found in the Śuddhi-tattva of Raghunandana, Yama-saṃhitā (ii.53) etc. are only later growths not at all warranted by the Vedic custom. These rigidities were not known in the Vedic days, when women were shown every possible consideration in social as well as religious matters. Regarding tonsure, it may be noted, that it must have evolved at a very late period. The Mahābhārata (XV.27.16), the Brahmavaivartapurāṇa (83.101), etc. do not advise the widows to shave off their heads; in the former, widows are found arranging their hair, whereas in the latter they are simply advised not to dress it. The Śambhu-saṃhitā, Hayagrīva-saṃhitā, and Manu-saṃhitā<sup>22</sup> (not the Mānavadharmasāstra) are strongly opposed to the observance of this rite. Vedavyāsa (1.53), Mādhavācārya, Anantadeva, etc., who support this, are all later authors whose opinions do not count against the Vedic authority.

21 Skanda-pūrāṇa, Kāśī-khaṇḍa (Vaṅgavāsī ed.). p. 2072 ff.

22 Indian Antiquary, vol. III, pp. 136-13

Thus it is shown that from the ritual point of view both the widower and the widow are, no doubt, under certain obligations, but none is more handicapped than the other from the social and religious points of view. Failing in cherishing the memory of the other half for the rest of life, either may remarry; but such marriage is of no religious importance whatsoever. The rites performed by or for them are just the same as in the Vedic ritualistic literature; there is no connivance at or partiality for either party.

CHAPTER V

The Mother

The Vedic Ritual shows that the Mother and the Father are one and the same in Life as well as after death, but so far as the children are concerned, they are to respect their Mother a thousand times more than they do their father.

If the Mother really becomes One with her husband by means of the Marriage and Cathurthīhoṃa Mantras,<sup>1</sup> how can it be proper that her Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa should be performed with the mention of her father's Gotra and not her husband's?

Āpastamba<sup>2</sup> says the young of the Cuckoos, depending upon others for livelihood, return to their parents after perfect development; so do women after their death. At the end of a year the son should perform the Sapiṇḍana for the mother with the Maternal grand father as the man just as he should perform for the father with the paternal grand father says Uśanas.<sup>3</sup> The Bhaviṣyapurāṇa<sup>4</sup> says the offerings should be given to the mother with the mention of her father's gotra, not her husband's; in birth as well as in danger women resort to their fathers.

The opinion of these Authorities is, however, clearly opposed to that of equally outstanding Authorities. According to Yama,<sup>1</sup> the Sapiṇḍana of the mother should be performed with the mention of her husband's Gotra and name. Hārīta<sup>2</sup> says the woman loses her father's Gotra in the seventh step during her marriage; (so) the offerings of cakes and water to her should be made with the mention of her Husband's gotra. Bṛhaspati, as quoted by Hemādri in the Śrāddhakalpa,<sup>3</sup> says the woman should be offered the cakes and water in her husband's Gotra.

The disputed nature of the question becomes still more manifest when the same Uśanas is found quoted by both the schools of thought. He is found on the side of the latter school when he says "Ekatvaṃ sã gatã bhartuḥ piṇḍe gotte ca sũtake. Tasmãd UdaKapinḍau tu bhartṛgotreṇa nirvapeṭ; She has been One with her husband in Piṇḍa, Gotra, Sũtaka; therefore, the offering of cake and water should be made to her in the Gotra of her husband."

1 The comparisons that the Purāṇa gives in this connection are marvellous.

2 Hemādri, p. 1651.

3 P. 1651; also Śūlapāṇi in the Śrāddhahiveka, p. 256.

The Antyeṣṭyarka<sup>1</sup> says in connection with the Sapiṇḍanaprayoga “Mātuh sapiṇḍikaraṇaṃ...amukagotrābhiḥ asmatpītāmahīprapītāmahivṛddhaprapītāmahībhiḥ.....sapiṇḍikaraṇaṃ kariṣye”. Here, “Amukagotrābhiḥ: with all of the Gotra N. N.” shows that the Mothers all belong to the same Gotra. Unless they all belong to the Bhartṛgotra, it cannot be expected that all the three Mothers would have the same Gotra, because all of them are not likely to belong to the same Pitṛgotra; as coming from different families, it is only likely that their Pitṛgotra would vary. Therefore, the Mothers have their Bhartṛgotra after death.

Nārāyaṇa Bhaṭṭa in his Antyeṣṭikriyāpaddhati<sup>2</sup> says in regard to the Sapiṇḍikaraṇa of the mother (the sacrificer is to make the Saṃkalpa like this): “I shall mix together the water of the vessel consecrated to the Preta of Gaṅgā of the Bhāradvājagotra with that of the Arghyapātras consecrated to Kṛṣṇadā, Venīdā and Narmadā<sup>3</sup> (all) of the Bhāradvājagotra, the mother, grand-mother and great-grand-mother of the husband of the Preta respectively, who represent Vasu,

2 F. 197a, 1.4 f.

3 “Dā” is always to be added as a suffix to the name of females whenever they are used in Rituals; Man. GS., p. 83, 1. II-14.

etc.”<sup>1</sup> Here, too, the Mother, who is a Preta now and all the three mothers-in-law are addressed as “of the Bhāradvāja Gotra.” Because of the reasons mentioned above, the Gotra used here cannot but be the Gotra of their husbands. So they cannot but belong to their husband’s Gotra.

The Maiden walking round the Fire in the Sākamedha Ritual expresses her ardent desire to be severed from her father’s family and Gotra and be parmanent in the husband’s Gotra.<sup>2</sup>

The Smṛti<sup>3</sup> says that by means of the Mantras uttered during the Caturthīhoma the wife unites with her husband-skin with skin, flesh with flesh, heart with heart, senses with senses: therefore, she belongs to his Gotra. Brhaspati<sup>4</sup> lays

1 The mother of the husband represents Vasu; his grandmother the Rudra; his great-grand-mother the Āditya. Their husbands, too, represent the same deities. This also shows that the husband and the wife are One Soul and cannot have different Gotras after death.

2 See Mahidhara as quoted in part I, p. 10 of this Thesis.

3 Gobb. GS., Bib. Ind., p. 355. 1. 10-11.

4 Hemādri, Śrāddhakalpa, p. 1651;

चतुर्थीहोममन्त्रैस्तु मांसमज्जास्थिभिः सह ।

एकत्वमागता भर्तुस्तस्मात्तद्गोत्रभागिनी ॥

पाणिग्रहणिका मन्त्राः पितृगोत्रापहारकाः ।

Śūlapāṇi, op. cit., p. 265.

particular stress on the Marriage Mantras in this connection. And in fact the Marriage and Caturthīkarma Mantras are decisive in this matter. "Your heart is my heart and my heart is your heart"-these sanctifying and soul-stirring Mantras would be meaningless if the Sapiṇḍikaraṇa of the mother is performed with the mention of the father's Gotra.

So the use of the Mātāmahagotra during the Mātṛsapīṇḍana is rather an accident than a rule.

Baudhāyana and Yajñapārśva as quoted by Śūlapāṇi in his Śrāddhāvivekaśaṃgraha<sup>1</sup> recommend the use of the Mātāmahagotra if the Sapiṇḍikaraṇa is performed by the son of a Putrikā. He should invoke with the first cake (Piṇḍa) his mother, with the second his mother's father, with the third his mother's father's father. A daughter is made Putrikā for the benefit of the father; she is given in marriage on the express condition that the children she will produce will perform as his own children all the religious rites.

Vyāsa<sup>2</sup> says, no doubt in this marriage, too, (i.e. of a Putrikā) the wife becomes One with her husband after her marriage, but as soon as she produces a child, she ceases to be One with him.

1 P. 265, 1. 15-16.

2 Op. cit., Hemādri, p. 1656.

According to Vṛddhaśātātapa<sup>1</sup> the Sapindikaraṇa of the mother married in accordance with one of the base forms of marriage (āsurādi)<sup>2</sup> should be offered in her father's gotra. The Śrāddhamayūkha<sup>3</sup> cites the Authority of the Mitākṣarā, etc. in support of this view. Hemādri in the Śrāddhakalpa<sup>4</sup> says that as in such a case the daughter is not offered to the bridegroom by the father of his own accord after the relinquishment of all his claims, she cannot be forcibly taken out of her father's family and Gotra. Śātātapa says, her Sapiṇḍana should be offered with her mother, grandmother and great-grand-mother (on the father's side). The Madanapārijāta,<sup>5</sup> too upholds this view. Hemādri is of opinion that the Family Tradition should, however, be followed, and if it is in accordance with the Family Tradition, the mother's Sapiṇḍikaraṇa should be offered along with the utterance of the Gotra of Maternal grand-father. It will be seen in this connection that these Authorities mention this rather as a concession than as a recommendation, and as such, it is only a Gauṇadharmā.

The mother by all means retains her husband's Gotra and remains One with her husband after death, but deserves preferential treatment from her children for the pain she undergoes during the pregnancy and in rearing them, and most probably, for the incomparable love and affection she has for her children which the father seems to develop in course of association with the children. The Love of the mother towards children is spontaneous and natural, and is not based on any earthly selfish end. The Mother is the embodiment of all Blessings from Heaven, all Hope, Ambition, and Devotion on Earth; she is the Sum Total of all Religious Merit for the child, as it were.

From the beginning of her conception, the mother undergoes a series of saṃskāras for various purposes, but always with one object in common—the welfare of the child. In the prebirth saṃskāras the father no doubt joins, but as these are Strī-saṃskāras, his participation signifies nothing more than helping the mother in the proper performance and observance of these rites. His service is dispensable in as much as in his absence the brother-in-law or some body else may join in the performance in his stead; but someone must help her as she, during her pregnancy, is ritualistically impure and cannot be supposed to offer the oblations, etc.<sup>1</sup>

In the fourth month<sup>1</sup> of her pregnancy<sup>2</sup> she has the rite for securing the safety of the embryo performed. Her limbs are besmeared with a salve of clarified butter along with the utterance of prayers<sup>3</sup> for having all sorts of maladies removed from every part of her body. According to Āśvalāyana as quoted in the Sam̐ May.,<sup>4</sup> she remains lying in the shadow of the Fire-shed and a kind of herb named Ajitā is put into her nostrils. Śaunaka<sup>5</sup> mentions while she remains in the above-mentioned place, a girl (kanyā) should press some dūrvā-grass in the stones along with the sprinkling of water and get the juice out of it. The husband takes it, touches her, and murmurs the Prajāvat<sup>6</sup> and Jīvaputra<sup>7</sup> hymns. Having stood to the west of the wife he now pours into her right nostril the Dūrvā juice in such a way that it passes into her stomach. She then sips water and keeps on touching the husband while he offers the oblation. Then the husband touches her heart with his (right) palm and prays for long life and welfare.<sup>1</sup> According to Śaunaka, this rite should be repeated in each pregnancy.

She takes particular care that the embryo may develop<sup>2</sup> and not fall. If there is any miscarriage,<sup>3</sup> the husband strokes her body from the navel upwards with wetted hand and prays for the long life of the mother as well as of the child.

In the third<sup>4</sup> or fourth<sup>5</sup> month of her pregnancy or even later<sup>6</sup> she observes the Pūṃsavana rite.

The earliest reference to the rite is found in AV. Here in III. 23<sup>1</sup> a charm has been prescribed wherein an arrow should be broken over the mother's head for procuring the child as desired. According to VI, II,<sup>2</sup> a rite for Pūṣsavana, fire is generated between Śamī and Aśvattha and is variously applied to the pregnant woman. The AV. also prescribes a ritual<sup>3</sup> to be offered with an oblation in the lap of a woman desirous of offspring; in other places<sup>4</sup> a different ritual has been described.

According to the Vārāha school, she is wrapped up in an unwashed cloth, and the powder of the Nyagrodha shoot is poured into her right nostril. Then the husband touches her right abdomen with the prayer for the fulfilment of the object.

According to the Kāṭhaka school, Sthālīpāka oblations and Homas are offered thrice to Agni, Indra and Viṣṇu for having the child as desired.

Vaikhānasa says she should sit, during the performance of the rite in the forenoon, to the west of the fire.<sup>1</sup> The husband gives her some barley-corns mixed with mustard-seed or their substitute, beans and grain-corns. Her belly is touched after which she partakes of the threefold food, a mixture of equal quantities of milk, sour curds and melted butter.

Bhāradvāja says a maiden should pound a Nyagrodha shoot in the mill-stones; this pounded shoot should be poured into her right nostril when she, to the west of the fire, keeps her head up towards the east. She reciprocates her husband's wish for having the child.

According to Hiranyakeśin the husband should give her a barley-grain in her right hand and two mustard seeds, or two beans on both sides of the grain and pour a drop of curd on them which she eats. The following ritual is the same as in Vaikhānasa. The Baudhāyana school prescribes quite a different ritual.<sup>2</sup> The husband first offers oblations with cooked food and then oblation with clarified butter

<sup>1</sup> The place she occupies and the position she takes have been variously mentioned. Place: Āśv. GS., I, 13.5: in the shadow of a round apartment; *Gobh. with prayers for children.<sup>1</sup> Then he anoints her face four times with the remnant of clarified butter along with the utterance of the prescribed hymns.<sup>2</sup> According to the School of Āśvalāyana as described by Kumārila<sup>3</sup> and Śaunaka,<sup>4</sup> she should, after her bath and wearing two washed clothes, adorn herself with garlands, etc., and also observe the rite Kautukabandha.<sup>5</sup> The husband now begins to offer the oblation. After the Anuyāja, she sips water, sits with her face towards the east to the right side of the husband and keeps on touching him while he finishes oblation. Then she washes her (right) hand, stretches it and touches with it two beans and one barley mixed with curd. The husband asks her thrice what she is drinking, to which she replies thrice "Giving birth to the child (as desired)". She now drinks the curd together with grain-corns and the barley and sips water; she twice drinks the curd. She again carefully washes her mouth.<sup>6</sup>

According to Gobhila and Khādīra she should sit, after her bath and dressing, on the Kuśa grass pointed northwards with her face to the East. The husband stands behind her and touches her uncovered navel with his hand

According to Jaimini<sup>4</sup> she mutters, after she has been offered the beans and barley together with a drop of sour milk, the prayer for having the child, female or male as desired on this occasion, and also for bringing forth together with her husband long lived children (on later occasions). Then she fastens with two threads, one white and the other red, a Nyagrodha shoot having fruits and bears it on her neck.

According to the majority of authorities, she should perform this rite in each pregnancy.<sup>5</sup>

she, according to several schools, sits to the west of the fire with her face to the East<sup>1</sup>; according to others,<sup>2</sup> behind the fire. According to ŚāṅGH.,<sup>3</sup> and JaimGS.,<sup>4</sup> she should keep on touching the husband while he offers the oblation along with the utterance of the Mahāvyaḥṛtis.

According to the Kāṭhaka and the Varāha, the husband should first loosen all her hair and rub thereon his hands anointed with butter. Then she should part her hair with a porcupine quill having three white spots or a Sami-twigg having leaves. According to Laugākṣi,<sup>5</sup> her hair should be dressed in two side-locks with a thread, partly blue and partly yellow. According to Brāhmaṇabala, the one on the right side should be dressed first. The Vārāha prescribes also the use of a woollen string for the purpose.

According to the Vaikhāṇasa school,<sup>6</sup> the porcupine quill with three white spots together with several objects<sup>7</sup> is to be placed on the parting line of the hair which is smoothed later on by the husband with the quill. Baudhāyana<sup>8</sup> says after her hair has been parted, some Barley-flowers should be fastened to it. Bharadvāja<sup>9</sup> also gives a similar ritual as Vaikhāṇasa, but adds that after the parting of her hair all the materials used for the Ritual should be placed in front of the fire, so also three rice mixed with sesamum and a water vessel. She is required to look at each of these and to answer on the husband's question, what she sees, that she sees "Children and Cattle". One of these (three) rice should be used in feeding Brāhmaṇas, one for Brāhmaṇis and the other she should eat together with sons or daughters as desired. Just like Baudhāyana, Āpastamba<sup>1</sup> also says that a few barley-shoots should be tied to her hair, but adds that she should keep silent till the stars appear and before she speaks it she should go along with her husband towards the East or North and murmur the Mahāvyaḥṛtis.

According to Jaimini,<sup>2</sup> she should be made to sit on an excellent seat or on a mattress of Eraka grass and her hair should be parted from the beginning of the forehead to the top of the head. Her hair should be adorned with flowers. The husband asks, after having filled a vessel with water mixed with gold dust, what she sees therein, and she answers she sees Children, Cattle, good luck for herself and long life for her husband.

Like Jaimini, Āśvalāyana also recommends that her hair should be parted just from the front, but others think that the parting should begin from the middle. Some other material than the porcupine quill<sup>1</sup> might also be used,<sup>2</sup> but this material, according to Sāṅkhāyana,<sup>3</sup> should be left in her lap.

According to Pāraskara,<sup>4</sup> Sāṅkhāyana<sup>5</sup> and Gobhila,<sup>6</sup> the husband should tie an even number of Udumbara fruits on a string and fasten it to her neck with the prayer that she might be "Fruitful". He does so before the parting; so it seems that during the parting of the hair he touches the string on her neck with the left hand while he does the parting with the right.<sup>7</sup>

The Mān. GS.<sup>8</sup> mentions a rite to be observed in the 8th month of her pregnancy in which she should be bathed with water mixed with fruits. After she is dressed with unwashed cloth and adorned with scented flowers, the fruits should be kept hanging on her neck in the form of a necklace.

When the mother is about to be confined, ceremonies for easy delivery<sup>9</sup> are performed. According to the Vaikhānasa school the lying—in room is to be fumigated

According to the SatGS., ĀpGS., BharGS., and the PārGS., the husband should touch her on the head and sprinkle her. Hiranyakeśin says the husband should touch her belly and stroke her body from above downwards. According to the Kauśika Sūtra<sup>5</sup> four muñja stalks are to be placed on her head with the points towards the East and four reed-stems with points towards the West in case any evil omen be manifest, her right hair-lock may be washed. The husband should loosen her girdle after the womb has been dissolved, says Vaikhāṇasa. Laugākṣi<sup>6</sup> says when she is about to give birth, the husband should touch her head with his wetted hand and then proceed downwards to her heart along with the prayer for safe delivery. The Saṁskāramayūkha<sup>1</sup> quotes the Padmapurāṇa to show that for easy delivery some powder of the Eraṇḍa root mixed with clarified butter should be rubbed on her back. If the child does not come out a Viśalya is squeezed out on her secret parts which are also fumigated,<sup>2</sup> also the root of yellow jasmine should be placed near her feet and in her hands.

For the safe coming out of the after-birth (Jarāyu), the husband offers his prayers; in case of delay the husband is enjoined to sprinkle water on her head.<sup>4</sup>

If the child dies during birth, certain special rites are observed for the good of her as well as her dead child.<sup>5</sup>

As soon as the child is born, a fire is lit up,<sup>6</sup> one of the reasons being, most probably, the smoking of the child. According to Gobhila,<sup>7</sup> she should not be touched by her husband until ten nights pass.

During the Jātakarman the father bathes the child in lukewarm water and places him on her lap along with

The ceremonial observance<sup>1</sup> of her getting up from child-bed takes place on the 10th day<sup>2</sup> after child-birth<sup>3</sup> when the impurity due to child-birth ceases.<sup>4</sup> According to Sāṅkhāyana,<sup>5</sup> the parents should wash their heads, wear new clothes, and partake of the Sthālīpāka cooked on the Sutikāgni by the father.

On the 10th day or later<sup>6</sup> she participates<sup>7</sup> with her husband in giving a name to her child. The name of a girl should consist of an odd number of syllables, e.g. three (MānGS. 1.18.1.) The ending should be either Dā (MānGS. 1.18.1; Gobhila, 2,8.16) or Ā (JaimGS. 1.9)

According to Āpastamba,<sup>4</sup> Hiranyakeśin,<sup>5</sup> and Bhāradvāja,<sup>6</sup> the mother and the father should pronounce the names together.

If the mother sees that for some reason or other her breasts have become insufficient for the child, she observes various rites as have been prescribed in the Saṁskāraratnamālā.<sup>7</sup> She also observes the rite of placing the child on the cradle (for the first time) on the 12th, 16th or 32nd day after its birth.<sup>8</sup>

For the special kind of food she would like to offer her child for the first time, she has to make a choice. She may choose the meat of a goat, partridge, Atibird, Bharadvāja or Kṛcaka with special objects in view. If child is desired to be all-round, various kinds of flesh should be mixed up and given. Āpastamba does not allow any alternative but suggests only partridge-meat*; Jaimini and Kāṭhaka no flesh but any sacrificial food.

According to Gobhila and Khadira, she should wash the head of the child in the morning. In the evening the father worships the moon and the mother, dressing the child, hands it over to the father with its face towards the north. She then goes behind the father, she being on his north. The father then recites the mantras (Mantra Brāhmaṇa 1.5. 10-12) in which the Moon is praised and gives the child back to the mother. with the prayer that it may never be separated from its mother.

She observes the rite of making the child<sup>1</sup> first sit on the ground in its 5th month; another rite when the teeth of the child appear.<sup>2</sup>

According to Āśvalāyana,<sup>6</sup> each time the father cuts the hair he gives it together with Sami leaves to the mother; she puts it down on the bull-dung. According to Hiranyakesi<sup>7</sup> and Varāha<sup>8</sup>, she sits to the north of the fire, holding a lump of bull-dung in her hands, therewith she receives the cut-off hair. It is then thrown into cow-dung so that it may not get into some wicked hands. According to Kauśika, the parents offer and receive the child three times between themselves.

The KāṭhakaGS., 40.2-5. makes it clear that the tuft of hair kept would show which family the child belongs to, thus a child of Vasiṣṭha family is required to have the lock of hair on the right side of the head, those of Vasiṣṭha and Atri families on both sides, those of Aṅgiras family five locks of hair and of the Bhṛgu family none at all.

The triple rites of the upanayana are: the vow of studentship, 2. learning Sāvitrī and putting a log of wood into the fire. The nāma-pr̥ccha or asking the name of the student is one of the supplementary rites. There are other minor rites which submerge in some one or other of the above three.

As soon as the son has begun Brahmacharya, he comes, first of all, to the mother for blessings. This shows that the mother is the best well-wisher of the daughter or son in life, particularly, in connection with the upanayana. This is quite in keeping with the fact that the student, after his Samāvartana, is instructed by the Guru to respect his mother most.<sup>1</sup> Āpastamba<sup>2</sup> says that after the return from the house of the Guru the student should give whatever he may obtain to his mother. On his reaching home the student should bow down, first, to his mother, and then to the father, as the mother is a thousand times more honourable than the father.<sup>3</sup>

The mother, so far as the Marriage is concerned, helps in every way possible the daughter as well as the son.<sup>4</sup> Her choice in selecting a bridegroom is adhered to.<sup>1</sup> To incur the displeasure of a mother-in-law is considered most unfortunate by the son-in-law,<sup>2</sup> which shows that in matrimonial affairs the mother exercises much influence. During the wedding of the daughter the mother stands in front of the fire with some fried rice on a winnowing basket.<sup>3</sup> Her prayers to the Fire are essential for the good of the daughter.

Thus in all the saṃskāras performed at various stages of the children's life, the mother seems to lead in importance. She keeps on touching the father while he offers the oblations, and that means that she is at the same time offering the oblations. So long as she is living, none of the above rites can be performed without her participation and prayers to gods for the good of the children.<sup>4</sup> The principle of bowing down to the mother first on the student's return after Samāvartana is also uphold by the honour shown to the mother in Aurddhadehika rites,

So far as the śrāddhas are concerned, several special ceremonies are performed in honour of the mother.<sup>5</sup> The 5 It will be seen in this connection that there is not a single rite performed for the father which is not performed for the mother just the same.

Candanadhenu śrāddha, the costliest and most ceremonial of all śrāddhas, is performed for the mother only.<sup>1</sup> The Anvaṣṭakās are also special rites performed for her in which she receives Piṇḍas along with her mothers-in-law (the grandmother and great-grand-mother of the sacrificer). The offering of the Piṇḍa in this Mātṛśrāddha is considered so important that Kamalākara, as quoted in the Śrāddhamañjarī says even a Garbhinīpati should offer the Piṇḍa in due time and even though the father of the sacrificer be living, it should be offered.<sup>3</sup> The Mañjarikāra says in plain words that this rite is a very important one and should be performed even though several conditions may remain unfulfilled.<sup>4</sup>

According to Kātyāyana<sup>5</sup> the mother should not be offered a separate Piṇḍa except on the day of her death, as her satisfaction arises from the Piṇḍa awarded to the father. This prohibition or a separate offering to the mother applies to the followers of this particular school only, and even then it is designed to emphasise the fact that the parents are one and the same, and not that the mother is excluded from the right of having Piṇḍas. The statement that the satisfaction of mothers arises from the Piṇḍas awarded to the fathers shows that they also share in the Piṇḍas just as the fathers do; and it shows that the Piṇḍas are offered conjointly for the mothers also.<sup>1</sup> Kātyāyana does not prohibit the performance for the mother,<sup>2</sup> which means that she is a regular manē as the father is. So what Kātyāyana means is that in the Śrāddhas the parents should be considered as one and the same Devatā, and no separate Devatā should be attributed to the father. Again, this condition would apply only to the Pārvaṇa Śrāddhas as the same Kātyāyana remarks in another place<sup>3</sup> that no Vedic Ritual should be begun without worshipping the Manes and even then (Tatrāpi) the mothers should be worshipped first. In the Vṛddhiśrāddha,<sup>4</sup> the rite performed for the prosperity of the child, the mother must be worshipped first of all and then the father; so also in other sacrifices.<sup>5</sup>

Even when the rite Ābhyudayika is celebrated on three consecutive days, the mothers are to be worshipped on the first day.<sup>6</sup> Anyway, the very fact that the mother is entibled to the Sapiṇḍikaraṇa,<sup>1</sup> be it with the father<sup>2</sup> or the grand-mother,<sup>3</sup> at once shows the mother is a fullfledged Pitṛ and she has all the rights as other Pitṛs have.

The highest dignity of the mother's position is at once brought out by the fact that even her misconduct is not considered as a bar to the performance of the Aurddhvadehika rites for her—the sin being atonable by the son.<sup>4</sup> The father who is expelled from the caste for his crime is to be regarded as an outcaste by the son, too, but the mother<sup>5</sup> never is. Whatever be her crime the mother is the Mother for the son, and all the rites are performed for her.

That the mother is the highest Guru is also corroborated by the direct statements in the Mahābhārata<sup>6</sup> and the

Smṛti.<sup>1</sup> Manu<sup>2</sup> says definitely that she is a thousand times more honourable than the father.

The very fact that the mother should be worshipped at the beginning of any and every Vedic Sacrifice at once gives her the highest position as Guru.<sup>3</sup>

Thus it is seen in the pre-birth Saṃskāras, in the after-birth Saṃskāras, in the Aurdhvadehika rites, and in every other Vedic rite, that the position of the Mother is unique; she is the highest Guru and the rites performed by her and for her lead to the same conclusion.

CONCLUSION

Thus we have shown that in Rituals the Daughter holds no less important a position than the son; the Wife and the Husband hold an equally important position; and that the Mother holds a more honourable position than the father. On the whole, it can certainly be said that in no way does the Woman hold a less important position than the Man in the Vedic Ritual.

The Sister

In this section on the Daughter, it is only meet to say something about the woman as Sister. It is true that we do not get copious informations about the Sister from Vedic Literature, particularly from the ritualistic point of view. Still, the little that we get is sufficient to throw a flood of light upon the position of the Sister in ancient India.

In the Vedic Ritual Literature, we do not get any rite of the type of Bhrātr̥dvitīyā as observed in Bengal to-day (popularly known as Bhāiphomṭā). Even then, sweet strong relationship between the brother and the sister is manifest from the Vedic Literature. The Vedic Literature records dissensions among sisters<sup>1</sup> and also among brothers<sup>2</sup> but there is no such record about any dissension between a brother and a sister.

The word Bhrāṭṛ is derived from Bhṛ, to maintain and, therefore, it means the maintainer of the sister. The etymological significance of this word is amply borne out by the Vedic Literature.<sup>3</sup> Both the Śruti and the Smṛti are unanimous that a brotherless sister must not be married.

2. 3. 70. 2; Sat Bra. 4. 1. 5. 3

3. AV. 1. 14. 2; VājSamh. 305

The Ṛgveda shows that a brotherless wife<sup>1</sup> was likely to return to her father's family<sup>2</sup>; moreover, a brotherless girl used to roam about in despair and was led astray.<sup>3</sup> The AV. explicitly states that a brotherless sister is shorn of all glory and has nothing to boast of; she is simply compelled to lead a wretched life.<sup>4</sup> Moreover, it warns everybody that a brotherless wife is bound to bring about disaster in the long run.<sup>5</sup> On account of the sin incurred by marrying a brotherless girl, the bridegroom had to pay the father-in-law a penalty of 100 cows and a chariot.<sup>6</sup> Vāsiṣṭha adduces Vedic evidence regarding the undesirability of marrying a brotherless girl as she is only likely to become a substitute for son in her father's family<sup>7</sup>. Yājñavalkya<sup>8</sup>, Gautama<sup>9</sup>, etc. are also of the same opinion.

The Atharva-veda represents the curse of the sister as a living being<sup>10</sup> and it was terribly dreaded by brothers<sup>11</sup>.

In the Vedic Society, the Sister was considered indispensable and as a consequence, sisters were even adopted. Thus, Paṇis adopted Saramā as their sister.<sup>1</sup> In a list of close relations given in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, the brother and the sister are placed together which shows that no other relationship can, according to the Upaniṣad, intervene between the two.<sup>2</sup> Bhaga means the combination of wealth, prowess, fame, fortune, knowledge and renunciation of the world; the sister is bhaginī, because she is possessed of these all for the brother.

In the Vedic Literature, there is an interesting discussion about the relative importance of the wife and the sister in the family. According to some seers, the sister was the more important of the two. They advocate that in the same sacrifice, the most important of all the Vedic sacrifices, after the utterance of the Mantra known as "Agni Gṛhapati", the Mantra called "Rākā" is to be uttered and not the one entitled "Devānām paṭnīḥ."<sup>3</sup> Because "Rākā" represents the sister and as in the family, the sister was more important than the wife, in the sacrifice also the same must be the case and the sister must be shown more honour than the wife. And therefore, the Rākā mantra must be uttered first and then the Mantra “Devānām patnīḥ,” and accordingly, the drinking of the Soma juice for the sister must precede that for the wife. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, however, passes a different opinion. Though the wife comes from outside still the sister is to be dependent upon her sister-in-law.<sup>1</sup> “Ātmā vai jāyate putraḥ”; and the wife is the progenitor of the self in the form of children. The husband prays that he himself may be her eleventh child.<sup>2</sup> The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa decides in favour of the relative importance of the wife, no doubt; still, it cannot be doubted that the opinion of the opponent school was a formidable one and had to be dwelt upon at length in the work itself. Again, the “Rākā” Mantra must have been given precedence in those parts of the country where matriarchy was the rule.

The Wife in Indian Literature

*The twin usages of polygamy<sup>1</sup> and polyandry have both been known in India from time immemorial in varying degrees. Brāhmaṇas have never advocated either of this—monogamy being always the ideal. The dogmatic explanations of the Taittirīya Saṃhitā,<sup>2</sup> Aitareya Brāhmaṇa<sup>3</sup> and Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa<sup>4</sup> about a man having more than one wife and a woman having only one husband draw our attention to what prevailed in some parts of the country and not what the Brāhmaṇas recommended. The unconditional union of heart and soul—serene, soleman and sublime—of the husband and wife,<sup>5</sup> the application of love-charms by the wife for having the husband as her own and other mutual solicitations for constancy in love<sup>6</sup> and the aspired

“Cākṛavākam samvnanam” mentioned by the Gṛhyasūtras in connection with the marriage,<sup>1</sup> Caturthikarma<sup>2</sup> and the Garbhādhāna<sup>3</sup> cannot but lead to the conclusion that monogamy is the ideal of the society. The Vedic Literature depicts the wife in the loveliest colour<sup>4</sup> and this is possible in a society where monogamy is the rule. She is the absolute Master of the household; as a matter of fact, she is the house.<sup>5</sup>

The incorporation of many non-Aryan women in the Aryan fold in some form or other, brought about a social revulsion. In later ages all the three higher castes were allowed to marry Śūdrās and the Aryans themselves could marry from castes lower to themselves, i.e. a Brāhmaṇa could marry a Kṣatriyā as well as a Vaiśyā in addition to a Brāhmaṇī and so on. The extensive performance of rituals in which a large number of women including the sacrificer's daughter, not to speak of Dāsīs, was given as sacrificial gift, encouraged polygamy which degraded Indian women to the lowest abyss.

The Supreme Soul created the first woman for love. As He found no delight without her, He divided Himself into two equal halves; as husband and wife they became one and complete again and again.<sup>1</sup> From the beginning the wife is thus the equal half of her husband. The husband hands over the dust of the foot-print of the cow to the wife for the increase of her wealth as she is the half of his self.<sup>2</sup> In the Vājapeya sacrifice he wants her to accompany him in mounting the post for Heaven for the same reason.<sup>3</sup> Yājñavalkya says, the wife and the husband are each like half a shell.<sup>4</sup> She completes him.<sup>5</sup> They are one body.<sup>6</sup> In the Vedas, the Smṛti and the popular usage she is declared to be the equal half of her husband, sharing equally the religious merit or demerit.<sup>7</sup> The half of the body of her husband falls if she takes spirituous liquor.<sup>8</sup> The woman as wife protects the society from chaotic conditions.<sup>9</sup> The wife makes the husband holy.<sup>1</sup> She opens the gateway to truth for her husband.<sup>2</sup> The wife is the home<sup>3</sup> and as such, she protects all the four stages of life by her munificence and gracious help.

It is no wonder then that the wife and the husband, from birth to birth, are reborn in the same yoni be it human or some other. The Śruti says when the female half of Prajāpati became a cow, the male half became a bull; when the former became a mare, the latter became a stallion; when the former a she-ass, the latter a he-ass.<sup>4</sup> As they are two equal halves, in some births the wife becomes the husband and in some others the husband becomes the wife. He who performs the cremation of his wife with the Agnihotra becomes the wife and his wife becomes the husband in the following birth; if a respectable wife dies before the husband as a consequence of the insults done her by the latter, she becomes the husband and he the wife for three lives to follow.<sup>5</sup> King Purañjana was capable of transforming himself into Vaidarbhī by virtue of his deep devotion to his wife.<sup>6</sup> The view of the wife and the husband being one person and two equal halves with equal rights is also upheld by the principles laid in the Śrāddha ceremonies, particularly, the Sapinḍikaraṇa.

As against the above passages, Aitiśāyana<sup>1</sup> goes so far as to say that the woman, far from having equal right with man, has no right (Adhikāra)<sup>2</sup> at all to sacrifices. He says, the word स्वर्ग-कामः in the श्रुति text दर्श-पूर्णमासाभ्यां स्वर्ग-कामो यजेत refers to a man only; the woman is, therefore, excluded. Moreover, the wife is “nirdhanā—without any property;” so she cannot have any right over the sacrificial staff required for the proper performance of the sacrifice. The wife is herself a property as she is sold by the father and purchased by her husband. Whatever she may earn by means of spinning, etc., belongs to her husband; as she is dependent, she cannot independently work for herself and acquire property thereby. A property cannot be said to have possession of other property; so as she has no possession over the sacrificial materials, viz., the wheat, the rice, etc., she cannot have any right to offer sacrifices.

But this view is not tenable, as the masculine gender in स्वर्ग-काम is not, however, intended to designate males only, the class Man being indicated. It means “यः स्वर्गकामः स यजेत —one who aspires to Heaven should sacrifice.” As a woman certainly longs for heaven, she is also entitled to offer the sacrifice.<sup>1</sup>

According to Jaimini, the wife cannot be said to have any claims to property; she does not possess riches, as she does not want to; but whenever necessary, she may justly claim her share in the property—फलोत्साहविशेषात्.<sup>2</sup> When she is married, she is assured that she will never be deprived of her common rights to Religion, Wealth and Love. According to Yājñikadeva, she has certainly the right of possession over the property acquired by means of her personal labour and that awarded by her father, brother, etc.; and the property earned by her husband is the common property of the wife also.

It is not right that the wife is sold and purchased like a chattel. The selling of a daughter is severely condemned in Brahmanic Literature. The passages, viz. दुहितृमते दद्यात्,<sup>3</sup> आर्षं गोमिथुनम्<sup>4</sup> etc., which Aitīsāyana seems to refer to, do not refer to the selling of the daughter or the purchase of the wife. The price of objects for sale always varies; it can never be permanently fixed, but in the passages mentioned above the price, if it be price at all, is always the same, be the girl qualified or not, beautiful or ugly. As regards the first passage, Gārgya Nārāyaṇa says the direction would apply only in those cases where the girl has no brother. The second passage refers to a particular kind of marriage and can therefore never be a general rule. And so on. There are direct statements in scriptures regarding the possession of the wife over property.<sup>1</sup>

By means of love she offers the sacrifice; she has her prowess in Love; by means of Love she takes possession of the wealth in her husband's house.

Kātyāyana<sup>2</sup> also says, स्त्री चाविशेषात् i.e. the woman also has the right to sacrifice because there is no particularisation. Karkācārya,<sup>3</sup> commenting upon the सूत्र, says स्वर्गकामः in स्वर्गकामो यजेत is an uddiśyamāna viśeṣaṇa; and because of viddhisamsparsābhāva, the number and gender are not significant (avivakṣita).<sup>4</sup> Yājñikadeva<sup>5</sup> also argues in the same way as Karka and comes to the same conclusion viz., the woman has every right to perform sacrifices. He gives an alternative explanation to say that अविशेषात् in Kātyāyana's सूत्र may mean स्वर्गकामत्वाविशेषात् as there is no difference in longing for heaven, i.e., as both of them equally desire for heaven."<sup>1</sup> The conclusion is that the woman is also entitled to perform sacrifices.

The right of the wife to offer sacrifices for the acquirement of religious merit is also established by scriptures. "(He) initiates the sacrificer with the girdle (mekhalā), the wife with the tie of the yoke of a plough,<sup>2</sup> "the wife in the iron,"<sup>3</sup> "the wife in the Gārhapatya silently"<sup>4</sup> etc., show what particular rites the wife has to observe and with what ends.

The wife is entitled to offer sacrifices, but can she offer them in her exclusive personal rights? A woman is entitled to perform sacrifices alone so long as she is alone. Thus, a maiden walks round the sacred fire in the Sākamedha for having a suitable husband. When the Phālguna Full-moon enters Uttaraphālgunī, she offers a furnished bed to a Brāhmaṇa for having a suitable husband.<sup>5</sup> In the Horse-sacrifice she puts pearls into the manes of the horse.<sup>1</sup> Yearning for Nārāyaṇa, Vedavatī devotes herself to dreadful ascetic vows and in her later birth nets him.<sup>2</sup> Satī, daughter of Dakṣa, undergoes penances for Śiva, goes to Himavat-pura and advises Haimavatī to worship Śiva.<sup>3</sup> Rukmiṇī worships Umā in her maidenhood; Kṛṣṇa abducts her while she is returning from her place of worship.<sup>4</sup> A widow can also perform some rites as we have shown in our section on the widow.

The brahmavādīnīs who do not even marry for observing religious practices are certainly entitled to offer sacrifices.<sup>5</sup>

The wife is not, however, entitled to do so. The wife and the husband are mutually dependent in sacrificial matters; in the same rite the husband is to perform some part, the wife the corresponding counterpart. Thus, in the Darśapūrṇamāsa while she looks at the sacrificial ghee, he is to bind together kuśa grasses. Now, if the wife or the husband intends to celebrate the sacrifice individually, the sacrifice cannot be properly performed as the absence of either of them would involve in the sacrifice an improper procedure. Neither the wife nor the husband should try to have the other's part of the sacrifice performed by selecting a substitute. The performer of the sacrifice reserves this power of selection; he may select a Hotṛ, Udgātṛ, Brahmā, Adhvaryu or any other person in connection with the sacrifice. But no selection in the case of the wife and the husband is possible. The husband is to be the Yajñāsvāmin while his wife the Yajñāsvāminī. The dictum स्वर्गकामो यजेत also shows that the wife and the husband are to offer together. By saying अग्नीषोमौ देवता it is meant that both Agni and Soma are to be worshipped but as their attribute godliness "Devatātva" is common, "Devatā" is purposely kept in the singular; similarly by saying स्वर्गकामो यजेत, it is meant that both the wife and the husband are to offer the sacrifice together as they have a common right. Again at the time of their marriage, their common possession of property is declared. The expenses to be incurred in the sacrifice must be borne by both of them. In no circumstances is the husband or the wife entitled to divide property; so no occasion for celebrating a sacrifice separately should really arise. The scriptures directly declare that the wife should not be deprived of her rights regarding Religion, Wealth and Love.

The Scriptures furnish us copious evidence regarding the joint sacrifice of the husband and the wife. They perform sacrifices together and pray to their gods so that they may, with their daughters and sons by their side, reach the full extent of life.<sup>1</sup> They with one heart and soul offer oblation to and worship their beneficent god Agni.<sup>2</sup> They with uplifted ladle serve together their God Indra and the latter in his turn profusely blesses them.<sup>3</sup> They together pour their presents to Indra in order to win a stall of kine.<sup>4</sup> They with their hearts knitted together with the thread of love wax old in their devotion to seek Agni.<sup>5</sup> They of one accord press out and wash the Soma juice and invoke their god to approach them.<sup>6</sup>

The Sāmpatnīya prayer declares that the wife and the husband acquire religious merit in common and enjoy together undecaying light in heaven.<sup>7</sup> Kātyāyana<sup>8</sup> also recognises their common acquirement of religious merit when he says, अनुचरीर्वा फलाधिकारात् or only the attendants (are to be awarded as sacrificial fee in the 'Āśvamedha sacrifice after Udavasānīya) as others (i.e., wives and the maiden daughter) obtain religious merit. Karka says that the wife cannot give the husband as sacrificial fee; so the sacrificer also cannot give his wife away: their possession, gift and acquirement of merit are in common and nobody is entitled to give the other away as sacrificial fee.

When the match-makers come in to select a girl, they say expressly that the hand of the girl is sought by them for such and such of such and such family in order that he may have children by her and offer sacrifices with her.<sup>1</sup> The Vedas, as cited by Manu, declared that the religious rites are to be performed by the husband together with the wife.<sup>2</sup> In commenting upon the Prājāpatya form of marriage which ordains that the husband and the wife are to perform religious duties together<sup>3</sup>, Haradatta commenting on AsvGS.<sup>4</sup> points out that in all other forms of marriage too such duties are to be performed together, but here the emphasis lies on the fact that those who are married according to the Prājāpatya form are to lead household life up to the end of their life.<sup>1</sup> In enumerating the forty sacraments, Gautama<sup>2</sup> uses the following words instead of the word Vivāha or any of its synonyms—"The taking of a help-mate for the fulfilment of the religious duties." The word "Sahadharminī" is extremely significant in this connection.

Viṣṇu<sup>3</sup> says the wife should observe the same vows as her husband. Manu,<sup>4</sup> Viṣṇu,<sup>5</sup> and the Bṛhaddharmapurāṇa<sup>6</sup> have the same couplet saying that the wife should not perform sacrifices, observe vows and fast separately. They<sup>7</sup> think her highest duty is to act according to his directions and should not, therefore, observe vows, etc. (against his will).

Similarly, the husband too cannot perform any sacrifices or observe vows without the wife. In all the religious observances the wife sits on the right of her husband except in the consecration (abhiṣeka) and the washing of Brāhmaṇa's feet in which she remains on the left—says

Bhaṭṭa Gopīnātha<sup>1</sup>. Kātyāyana<sup>2</sup> says both the husband and the wife should sit on the west of the fire, the wife being on the right of the husband. According to Attri<sup>3</sup> also the wife should be on the right of the husband in Śrāddhas, sacrifices and marriage. Vṛddhahārīta<sup>4</sup> says the wife is the mantra; so it is certain that as without the mantra, so without the wife the sacrifice cannot be performed. Even after her death the husband is required to make an image of her with kuśa grasses in order that he may offer in the fire raised from the previous fire with which she was cremated, the Agnihotra and Pañcayajñas as before.<sup>5</sup> Sāyaṇa in his Commentary on Ait. Brā. interprets the passage recommending the performance of Agnihotra by a widower<sup>6</sup> in the above light and refers to the rule of three debts. Kātyāyana<sup>7</sup> refers to the substitution of the golden image of Sītā by Rāma for his exiled wife and makes the rule that a widower should have his wife's substitute in order that he may perform the Vedic sacrifices. So, alive or dead, the wife is always with her husband during the performance of their sacrifices.

The Padmapurāṇa<sup>8</sup> says the sacrifices of a person having no wife are useless. The wife is the highest religion and in the three worlds there is no other Dharma like her for the husband. Kṛkālā, otherwise an ideal religious Personality, is abused by Dharma (Religion personified) as narādharma (worst among men) and caura (thief) because he was not accompanied by his wife Sukalā during the Śrāddha offered by him to his parents. The wife is the head of domestic religion. Without her there can be no religion at all.

Additional Note on the Chief Wife

If the fire goes out, it is the first wife who is to rekindle it. She should on the preceding day take her food in the day time,<sup>1</sup> observe brahmacharya and silence, wear silken garments<sup>2</sup> and towards sunset enter the Gārhapatya house from the south and seat herself to the right of her husband, both facing the east. At the beginning of the sacrifice, when the Adhvaryu offers both the Araṇis to the sacrificer, he places the upper one on his own lap and hands over the lower one to her which she similarly places on her own lap.<sup>3</sup> During the night she keeps awake with her husband to keep up the fires.<sup>4</sup>

If a co-wife is left at home, the wife may leave the fires in charge of her, but that would mean that the co-wife would be simply a representative of the wife and nothing more than that. Certainly the wife should take away the fires with her<sup>5</sup> if it is not simply impossible for her to do so.

The words "na doṣaḥ" in these texts cannot mean otherwise than this, that the (first) wife is the proper person to attend, but in her absence, some other wife might be allowed to do so (but never a Sūdrā wife), and thus be a representative for her.

Correction

P. 32, l. 13 For Gārgī, read Kātyāyanī

P. 56 read 4 after Mahābhāṣya in l. 10 and not after cost in l. 9.

P. 131, l. 8 read before the former in their turn, etc. and after the son of ten fathers :—

Vāli and Sugrīva were born of two husbands living at the same time (Rāmāyaṇa, vii. 42).
